THE FIRST BURMESE WAR, 1824-26.

CHAPTER I.

Origin of the War, and earlier operations on the Eastern Frontier.

The war of 1821-26 with the Kingdom of Ava owed its origin to causes which had been in operation for several years previously on the frontiers of the British districts of Chittagong, Sylhet and Rangpur These districts bordered, the first on the then Burmese province of Arakan, and the others on the petty states of Manipur, Kachar and Assam, which were in a large degree subject to Burmese influence. To indicate clearly what those causes were and how the mutual irritation arose which resulted eventually in hostilities, it will be necessary to enter in some detail into the history of the transactions which occurred on the frontiers from the time when the British and the Burmese territories first came into contact.

This was about the year 1781. In that year the Burmese effected the conquest of Arakan. The severity with which they exercised the government of that province, and the exactions which were levied on the people, frequently drove the latter into rebellion, the repression of which was usually followed by the flight of the defeated insurgents into the neighbouring British province of Chittagong. Here, in accordance with the invariable custom of the British Government in the treatment of purely political refugees, shelter and protection were extended to the fugitives, who were encouraged to settle down peaceably. Some did-so: others were averse to becoming peaceable neighbours of those who had driven them from their homes, and these made use of their place of refuge merely as a base from which to harass and annoy their enemies Burning with feelings of revenge, they hung about the borders in predatory bands, biding their opportunity, and, in spite of all piccautions by the British authorities, they frequently crossed the boundary line in large bodies to plunder and destroy in Arakan, letiring into Chittagong leisurely with their booty when successful, or again seeking refuge there in headlong flight when reverses overtook them. Seeing the direction whence these attacks came and whither the marauders retired, the Burmese concluded (and the conclusion was not unnatural) that these raids, if not absolutely instigated, were at any rate connived at by the British authorities. Hence much irritation was engendered against us; and though it was demonstrated, in reply to the remonstrances of the Burmese officials, that it was impossible always to prevent incursions of this sort, the feeling continued to grow and increase, while all attempts at conciliation were reguled as the result of fear, and served but to increase the insolence and presumption of the Court of Ava. Tor, it may be here remarked, the career of conquest begun under Alompra* and continued under his successors, had given the Burmese an inordinate idea of their prowess in war, and of their power generally, and shortly before the outbreak of the war it was an openly expressed opinion amongst them that five thousand of their warriors could casily effect the conquest of the whole of the British dominions in India.

Alompra (properly Alomey theore) was a man of humble origin, who about the year 1224 hogan an insurrect in against the Talany hing of Pegn to whom Aza was then subject. The recoil proved secretal, Aza was freed, and Pegn itself was subjected and the Talang dynasty ethografied. Alompra did not reign long over the employ he had created; he ded in 1760 Under his succession to Tensarking promanes were warried from Sum, and Araban conquered, while an invasion from the Chiefes Empire on the such that was signally deflected.

Our first serious difficulty with this people occurred in 1793, when a Burmese force pursued some fugitive insurgents across the frontier, and demanded, amongst other things, that three chiefs, against whom certain non-political offences were alleged, should be secured and surrendered to them. A small force of sepoys, under the command of Major-General Erskine, was thereupon moved into the Chittagong district, on whose approach the Burmese retired, but without withdrawing their demand for the surrender of the three chiefs, who were subsequently delivered up to them, the charges against them having been proved. This concession to justice was, as before remarked, unfortunately attributed to fear, and Burmese vanity was proportionately inflated.

In 1707-98, a body of some forty thousand people, unable to endure longer the oppressive government that existed in Arakan, emigrated to Chittagong. The Burmese Governor sent a force in pursuit of them, and some skirmishing took place with our troops on the frontier. Eventually, the Governor withdrew his troops. and the Burmese Government sent an envoy to Calcutta to demand the return of the fugitives. This was refused. but in the year 1800 the demand was reiterated in terms of menace. No notice was taken of this beyond strengthening the forces on the frontier, but subsequently Major Symes, of His Majesty's 76th Regiment, who had previously been sent on a mission to Ava, after the invasion of 1793, was again sent thither to explain the policy of the British Government, and to assure the Burmese monarch that it was not dictated by unfriendly feelings. The mission was treated with contempt, and the Burmese were still more convinced that dread of their prowess in war was the foundation of this and all other attempts at conciliation.

For some years after this no serious disturbances took place; but in 1811 an insurrection, headed by one Khayeng-byan (commonly styled King-Berring), broke out- in Ankan, and this speedily produced a fresh erop of troubles. This outbreak was, as usual, attributed to British machinations, and the Viceroy of Pegu, in anticipation of war, actually went to the length of laying an embargo on all British vessels in the Rangoon liver Captain Canning, of the Bengal Army, who had been previously (in 1803 and 1809) omployed on missions to Ava, was sent thither again to disayow all connection with the outbreak on the part of the British Government He met with but scant courtesy. and was soon after recalled, it being at last perceived that the despatch of missions, which were looked upon as apologetic, was not the best method of dealing with a semi-bai barous people like the Burmese. Khaveng-byan was at first successful, actually reconquering the whole of Arakan; but eventually he was defeated and fled, as a matter of course, into British territory. His surrender was demanded by the Burmese Governor of Arakan, with a menace of invasion with fire and sword if the demand were not complied with: but the assembly of a British force on the frontier had the effect of preventing any violation of our territory. There was, however, much disturbance on the frontiers until 1815, when the death of Khaveng-byan permitted the restoration of order. This affair had the effect of inflaming the resentment of the Burmese Government against us to a higher pitch than it had ever attained before.

Two years later there was a fresh outbreak, with the useful result of some of the people of Arakan fleeing into Chittagong, followed by the usual demand for their surrender and the usual refusal. The demand was repeated, and followed by one (such was the extravagant pitch to which Burmess arrogance had attained) for the immediate surrender of Chittagong, Moorshedabad and Dacca, as being ancient appendages of the Kingdom of Arakan, which was now a Burmess province.

For several years after this there was nothing on the Chittagong frontier to afford ground of complaint to the Burmese. But the latter now on their part began a series of aggressions against British territory, which soon showed that they were intent on provoking hostilities, for which, as it afterwards transpired, the Burmese people had become hotly eager. In the year 1821, and again in 1822, they seized and carried off the elephant hunters in the Company's employ, while these men were employed within the Company's territory in the Ramoo hills, and ill-used the unfortunate men to such an extent that some of them died. They also claimed the right of levying tolls at the mouth of the Naf river (the boundary between Chittagong and Arakan), and on one occasion, in January 1823, they killed a boatman, a British subject, who refused to pay a toll at a place where no tolls had ever been levied before, and where the Burmese had no right to levy tolls at all. This was followed by the assemblage of troops on the Burmese side of the stream, and threats of attack on villages within our frontier.

To prevent further aggression, the sepoy guard at the mouth of the Náf was reinforced, and a small party was posted on Shahpuri, an island on the British side of the main channel, which had been acknowledged to be British territory for the preceding forty years or more. 'The Burmese Governor of Arakan, however, affected to regard Shahpuri as being part of that province, and demanded the immediate withdrawal of the party, and on a refusal he, on the night of the 21th September 1823, landed a body of a thousand men on the island, attacked the sepoys, killed and wounded several, and drove off the rest.

The circumstances attending this affair are described in the following papers:—

Extract from a letter from Mr. Warner, Magistrate of Chittagong, to the Secretary to the Covernment of Bengal, dated the 28th September 1823.

The enclosed report from the darogah of Tek Náf will inform you of the Burmese having attacked and taken possession of the island of Shahpuri. Three sepoys have been killed, and three wounded, the rest have escaped to the thana of Tek Nat The action took place on the night of the 24th September The Burmese were in force about one thousand I shall address you to morrow, and give immediate notice to Lieutenant Colonel Shapland CB.

Translation of a report from the Darogah at Tek Nuf, dated the 21th September

This morning Ram Jeuren Jemadar of the guard stationed at Shahpur came to me and the Subadar of the guard at Tek Naf and stated that at midnight whilst the sipakis were under arms at their post the Burmahs in number about one thousand surrounded the Shahpuri stockade on all sides, and began to fire on the party The guard, finding themselves attacked, returned the fire and several rounds were discharged on both sides for the space of nearly an hour when three of the men, named Koorbance Sanchee and Gholam Khan, having been killed and the Burmahs having by the fire of their great guns set in flames a part of the stockade, the Jemadar was obliged to abandon the spot and re treat to the banks of the river Khor At this time Akbar the interpreter of the guard, according to the orders of the Jemadar called out Dooahee Company Bahadoor, but the Burmahs paid no attention to the remonstrance The ghat of the river was taken possession of by crowds of Burmese boats The Jemadar finding his ammunition nearly expended got with his party into two boats which the boatmen of the place had contrived to get ready for them and retreated the Burmese all the time firing at them and they returning the fire During the passage four of the party were wounded as per margin On arriving near Tek N4f they were joined by a party sent by the Subadar to reinforce them but finding they could not pass back to the island in consequence of the Shahpur gl at being in the possession of the Burmese they returned to Tek Naf The Jemadar further states that many of the Burmahs were lilled in the action, also a manyhee and a beatman are missing and one fisherman was killed and another wounded by the fire of the Burmahs.

Extract from a letter from Co1 tain Haj Commanding the Chittagong Provincial Battalion to the Secretary to Government in the Mills tary Department dated Clittagong — October 1823

I beg to inform you that on the evening of the 23rd Septem ber the Jemadars party of this corps† stationed on the island of Shahpuri was attacked by a body of Burmese, of about a thousand, from Arakan, and after some struggle, driven off the island, with the loss of three sepoys killed and three more wounded, two of whom are since dead.

As soon as intelligence of the outrage at Shahpuri reached the seat of government at Calcutta,* a detachment of two companies of the 2nd Battalion 20th Bengal Native Infantry,† was sent down to re-occupy the island, which was done in November 1823 without resistance, the Burmese forces having previously retired. At the same time a remonstrance was addressed to the King of Ava, but of this no notice was taken, the Burmese Government having already determined on war. Hostilities had, in fact, begun on the frontiers of Sylhet. How this came about is now to be related, and in doing this the course of events for some years previous in Assam, Kachar and Manipur must be described.

Assam, then an independent state, had long been a prey to intestine disorders. In the midst of these, about the year 1810, the Rajah, Chandra Kanta, invited the aid of the Burmese to free him from the thraldom of a powerful hereditary minister known as the Boora-Gohain. The aid asked for was given, but the minister having died before the arrival of the Burmese force, the latter was dismissed. Chandra Kanta having, however, been dethroned by a son of the deceased minister, the Burmese returned and reinstated him, and, glad to have seemed a footing in the country, they left, when they retired, a detachment behind under Maha Ilulawa, a general who afterwards commanded against us in some of the engagements in Ava. It was not long, however, before Chandra Kanta and his allies fell out, and in 1821 he was expelled from his Lingdom 8 by the celebrated Burmese general Maha Bandula, who subdued the whole of Assam and declared it permanently a part of the dominions of Ava. During the disorders attendant on these affairs frequent raids were made across the frontier into the British province of Rangpur; remonstrances were addressed to the Burmese officials, but without producing any effect beyond an insolent warning that the British authorities were on no account to afford refuge to fugitives from Assam, and an intimation that, if it were considered necessary, such fugitives would be followed up and arrested in the Company's territories. Here also, therefore, much irritation grew up.

Similarly, on the Sylhet frontier, Burmese aggression in the petty independent States of Kachar and Manipur laid the foundation of fresh grounds of complaint. Manipur, like Assam, had long been the scene of domestic disorder. Rajah Jai Sing, who died about the end of the last century, left three sons, not at all too well disposed towards one another. The eldest of these, Chorjit, made himself master of the state soon after his father's death, but in 1812 he was expelled by his brother Marjit, aided by a Burmese force. He took refuge in Kachar, where he was kindly received by the Rajah, Govind Chandra. With rare ingratitude, however, Chorjit, aided by his other brother, Gambhir Sing, subsequently raised a rebellion in Kachar, expelled his host, and possessed himself of the state. Here he was soon after joined by Maijit, who had been turned out of Manipur by the Burmese. Marjit and Gambhir Sing then combined and drove Chorjit out of Kachar, compelling him to take refuge in the British province of Sylhet, where the victim of his treachery, Govind Chandra, had already found an asylum. The latter had endeavoured to interest the Bengal Government in his behalf; being unsuccessful, he appealed to the King of Ava to aid him in recovering Kachar; this was promptly acceded to by the Burmese monarch, but the Bengal Government, becoming alive to the fact that the encroachments of the Burmese were daily assuming a more audacious character, abandoned their policy of non-interference, and entered into negociations with Mariit and Gambhir Sing, as de facto rulers of the country, in view to the establishment of a British protectorate over Kachar. Their overtures not being immediately accepted, they opened communication with Govind Chandra, who thereupon abandoned his alliance with the Burmese and entered into one with the British. Under the agreement thus concluded, Govind Chandra was shortly afterwards restored to Kachar, Marjit and Gambhir Sing having been induced to accept pensions and the command of some irregular forces (chiefly Manipuris) on the frontier. When, therefore, the Burmese troops invited by Govind Chandra arrived, they found themselves forestalled. Kachar being now under British protection. Though greatly exasperated at this check, the Burmese leaders, pending the arrival of reinforcements, outwardly accepted the situation with composure, but not long after they demanded the surrender of the three Manipuri chiefs and an acknowledgment that the Jainthia district was part of the dominions of Aya Both demands were promptly rejected, and the refusal was coupled with an intimation that, if any Burmeso troops attempted to advance into Kachar, they would be opposed by force. This threat produced no effect, reinforcements from Ava joined, and the Burmese commander proceeded to take the initiatory step in a war on which the Burmese king and the Burmese people were resolved. Towards the close of 1823, a body of four thousand Burmese entered Kachar from Assam by way of the Bhartika Pass, and stockaded themselves at Bikrampur, about forty-five miles from Sylhet on the cast, while a still stronger force advanced from Manipur and defeated the irregular troops under Gambhir Sing, who had ventured to oppose their march. To prevent these forces uniting, the British troops on the frontier were set in motion, and the war which had been so long impending at last began.

The troops in Sylhet at this time consisted of the left wing of the 1st Battalion 10th Bengal Native

Infantry,* three companies of the 2nd Battalion 23rd Bengal Native Infantry,† and four companies of the Rangpur Light Infantry, the whole under the command of Major Newton of the first mentioned corps. These troops had been disposed at Bhadrapur, Jatrapur and Talain, posts somewhat in advance of the Sylhet frontier, but on receiving intelligence of Gamblur Sing's defeat, Major Newton concentrated them at Jatrapui, whence he marched on the morning of the 17th January 1824, for the purpose of expelling the Burmese from the stockade at Bikrampui. The events which followed are described in the following reports -

Despatch from Mijor Thomas Newton, to the Adjutant General of the Army, dated Camp Bhadrapur, the 18th January 1821

In consequence of intelligence which I received on the evening of the 16th instant, that a body of about four thousand Burmese and Assamese had crossed into the plans at the foot of the Bhartika Pass, and were stockeding themselves at the villago of Bikrampur, -also, that a force to the castward had defeated Ruph Gambhir Sing's troops and that a third division were cross ing the Mootagool Pass into Jynthia to the north west, I resolved, under circumstances so threatening to my force, to concentrate my detrehment at Jatrapur, and move from thence with the whole due northward and attack the enemy before they could have time to strengthen their position. I accordingly ordered Captain Johnston to join me from Talain, leaving his camp standing and at 2 AM of the 17th we moved off At 6 AM just beyond an almost impervious grass and reed jungle, which we with considerable difficulty passed through, we came into a comparatively plain country, where the situation of the enemy was discovered by the discharge of two shots at the advanced guard Their position extended along the villages at the foot of the hills they were covered by the huts, bushes, &c, in a close and difficult country, and on their right they had a stockade, on the banks of a steep nullah occupied by about two hundred men The attack was made in two divisions, the southern fice of the stockade being assaulted by Captain Johnston with part of the 23rd

Native Infantry and Rangour Light Infantry, and the enemy's line in the villages being attacked by Captain Bowe with part of the 10th Native Infantry, the whole under my direction. This last was immediately successful, the greater part of the enemy, supposed to be Assamere, flying to the hills at the first, fire Captain Bowe then wheeled his force to the attack of the stockade, which was making a brace resistance against Captain Johnston, and in a short time it was carried by assault by the united exertions of both parties.

I cannot in too strong terms bring to your notice, for the information of His Excellency the Commander in Chief the exer tions of the troops on this occasion, the officers and men were equally conspicuous in their scalous endeavours. I cannot there fore particularise individuals, when all who were engaged claim an equal share of prises, but in justice to the ment of the Euro pean officers and staff, General and Medical, I do myself the honour to annex a list of their names and an account of the killed and wounded on both sides—

Extract from a letter from D. Scott, Eng., Agent to the Governor-General on the North East Frontier, to G. Sunnton, Eng., Secretary to the Bengal Government, dated Cump Bhadropur, the 31st Janu ary 1324.

I have now the honour to submit a report of occurrences on this frontier since the date of my last despatch from the station of Sylhet for the information of the Right Hon ble the Governor General in Council

- 2 Subsequently to the action which took place on the 17th instant, Major Newton returned with the force under his command to this place withdrawing the whole of the troops from Kachar The Burness then advanced to Jatrapur, about five nules east of the frontier and eight from hence, and the two armies from Assam and Manipur formed a junction near that place, and threw a bridge over the Surmah river, on both sides of which they erected stockades
- 3 This day the valued formerly deputed by the Magnetrate of Silhet to meet the army from Assam and several messengers who had been despatched with letters and detained in the Burnese camp, returned with a letter to my address, written in

Bengali characters, but in a dialect which no person in camp understands, so that I have not yet been able to ascertain the contents.

- 4. From the information brought by the vakeel and messengers, it appears that the Burmese force at Jatrapur is about six thousand strong, of whom four thousand are Assamese and Kacharis. They have also a force of about two thousand men in Hailakandi, of whom one-half are supposed to be Burmahs, so that the number of the latter who arrived by the way of Manipur must have been more considerable than might have been supposed from the effect of the opposition made to them by Gambhir Sing, who himself computed them at one thousand or one thousand and five hundred men carrying muskets.
 - 5. In a letter from the Burmese commander to the address of Govind Chandra and the British authorities jointly, received some days are, as well as from the information now brought by the valeel, who was confined in the Assamese camp for eighteen days, it appears that the Burmese have entered Kachar upon an invitation formerly given by Govind Chandra. They profess to have no desire of retaining the country themselves, but said they mean to return to Assam ria Jynthia, after revisiting Govind Chandra and securing the persons of their enemies Gambhir Sing, Marjit and Chorjit, whom they declare they have orders to follow and seize wherever they may have retired. In the commander's letter he also complains of the attack made upon him at Bikrampur.
 - -6 In reply to this letter, and in a communication previously made, I have acquainted the commander-in-chief that I had already in three different letters informed him, by the way of Assum, that the country of Kachar was under the protection of the British Government, and that the occupation of it would therefore be revisted, and that while I regretted the occurrence at Bikrumpur, he could not but be sensible that it was entirely attributable to his own conduct in persevering in this unwarrantable encroachment after repeated intimations that it would not be permitted.
 - 7. I further called upon him, now that he was convinced that we were in earnest, to execuate the country without delay, and present worse consequences; and I acquainted him that in case of refusal I should be compelled, however unwillingly, to order the advance of our troops, not only into Kachar itself, but also into Assam, whence the chief part of the invading army had proceeded. In respect to Govind Chandra, I stated that we had no objection to his re-establishment under the protection and as the act of the British Government and that although we could not with honour deliver up the Mampurin chiefs much less suffer them to be arrested in our territory, we would willingly concur so far in his masters views as to engage that they should not again be permitted to disturb the peace of Kachar

- The realy to this communication will be submitted to His Lordship in Council when received, but with reference to the considerable time that has clapsed since my arrival here and which has litherto been spent in vain attempts to establish a cor respondence with the Burmese interrurted until yesterday, by their invariably detaining my messengers. I have considered it proper to make His Lordship in Council acquainted with our past proceedings and to state that although I am satisfied that the Burnese commander has no intention of committing hostilities in our territories at present jet I have little expectation of his b ing indiced to retire from Kachar without recourse being had to correive measures, the necessity for which appears now more urgent than ever with reference to the tenor of Mr Robertson's despatcles copies of which were conveyed to me in your letter of the 24th instant and the consequent prolability that the Court of Ava will avail itself of the presence of the army now in Ka char to annoy us in this quarter which from the want of cavalry on our part and the number of their forces there is no doubt they could do to a very great extent by merely plundering the country in small parties without ever riskii g an engagement
 - 9 I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 17th and 24th instant with their enclosure to which I shall hereafter reply In the meantime I beg to state that I shall consider myself authorised to prevent the entrance of a Bur mese force into the territories of the Jinthia Pajah by which route they threaten to return to Assam
 - Having J st received the translation of a document in the Burmese character that accompanied the Bengah letter allud ed to in the fifth paragraph of this address I find that it differs very considerably from the latter of which it was supposed to be a counterpart I have the honour to enclose a translation, and to save time I have sent the rough copy which I request may be returned. I also enclose the original Birmese letter the Persian version being obviously defective in several places and in particu lar where it is stated that Gopi (Govihd) Chund went to Ava and is no v with the Governor of Assam that person being still in our territories and whatever he may formerly have done, at present disclaiming the connection I am informed that after the action on the 17th, messengers were despatched for instructions to Ava so that unless previous orders to that effect may, in the interim, be received, I do not anticipate any hostile movement on the part of the Burmese until the receipt of an answer.

The British forces in the vicinity having taken no notice of the Burmese force assembled at Jatrapur and on the Surmah river, the latter were emboldened on the 13th February to push their posts neaver to Bhadrapur, where Captain Johnston was posted with a portion of his own battalion (the 2nd of the 23rd Bengal Native Infantry), a wing of the 1st Battalion 10th Bengal Native Infantry, and some of the Rangpur Light Infantry.

What followed is related in the subjoined report from Captain Johnston to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army: them up without giving them time to rally, till every stockade was carried in the same gallant manner, and left in our possession. My instructions from Mr. Scott being not to commence firing unless much resistance was made provented the enemy s loss from being so great as they otherwise must have sustained. With the stockades the enemy abandoned a number of janjals and muskets and the whole of their ammunition

- 4 I am sorry to add that this success on our part was not obtained without the loss of a jemadar of the 1st Battalion 10th Regiment, and a number of men wounded principally by spikes and bows set in the ground to impede the advance of the detachment
 - 5 I cannot close this despitch without bringing to His Excellency's notice the gallant conduct of Captain Bowe who commanded the column of attack and that of Lioutenant Ellis who commanded the detachment of the 2nd Battalion 23rd Native In fantry and of whom Captain Bowe makes particular mention, in deed the whole of the detachment behaved with the utmost steadiness and bravery throughout prevent the enemy from returning in that direction and occupying them, and it being ascertained that several of the Burmee chiefs had concentrated their forces and taken up their foosition unler the Bhartika Pass, the detachment continued its route in the boats to the mouth of the Jellinghi river, where it disembarked at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 18th, and moved in the best order towards the enemy's position, where we arrived about of 18 AM, and found them strongly posted in two stockades on the left tank of the river, the passage of which, at the only place where it was supposed to be fordable, was completely commanded by one of them Their position was naturally very strong, and lad been made by the enemy and the late heavy falls of rain so difficult, as to appear almost impracticable to human means

3 Having reconnected the river both above and Lelew and all my endeavours to discover a more eligible passa, e having failed, in consequence of the depth and rapidity of the stream, and no boats being procurable, the only expedient left was to endeavour to get the men across on the backs of the elephants which accompanied me, under the cover of the fire of the he, ht company of the 1st Battahon 10th Regiment and a party of the Rangpur Light Infantry

4 Haying in this manner succeeded, after some little delay and much difficulty, in crossing nearly the whole of the 1st Battahon 10th Regiment and the detachment of the 21d Battalion 23rd, I directed an attack upon the stockades along the bank of the river but having ascertained that there was a rivulet in that direction that was impassable, I was compelled to order the attack through the jungle higher up the bark In this attempt the difficulties opposed to us by the jungle and muddy rivulet were almost of an insuperable nature, but the detachment having at length arrived at the north east corner of the stockade, immediately formed and carried it with the bayonet, the enemy dispersing and flying in all directions, pursued by our detachment towards another strong and extensive stockade under the hills, where it was imagined they were prepared to offer a determined resistance They, however, merely passed through it on their way to the hills, and the detachment advanced and took possession of and passed the night in it.

5 From all the accounts which have reached me, and from the number and extent of the stockades they had constructed, I cannot estimate the number of the enemy in this affair at less than five thousand, of whom at least two thousand are supposed to be Burmahs, and the remainder Assamese Their dispersion and flight in the greatest disorder and confusion towards the passes into Assam, the capture of all their standards, sureds and eight gilt challads, are the fru is of this affair

6 It is impossible for me to close this report without endeavouring to do justice to the good conduct of Captains Johnston and Bowen, who led the attack at the head of the grenadiers of the 1st Battalon 10th Regiment, Lieutenant McLaren, detachment staff, and Lieutenant Illis, 23rd Regiment This joing officer set a most noble example in dashing into the nullah and fording it neck high, followed by such of the troops as had not passed on elephants, which mainly contributed to our success

7 I am happy to say that this service has been performed with little or no loss only two men being wounded

Report from Lieutenant Colonel II Bowen Commanding in Sylhet, to Captain Bayldon Major of Brigade, Dacca, dated Jatrapur, 22nd February 1824

I have the honour to report to you for the information of Licettenant-Colonel Macmorine, commanding the Front er, that, agreeably to the requisition of D Scott, Esq. Political Agent, the detachment under my command again disembarked yesterday morning at eight o'clock, and after a march of two hours fell in with enemy's stockades at Dudhruth.

2 Several synrted attacks were made upon their position under cover of a heavy fire from three 6 pounders, all of which I am sorry to say, failed, and after a most severe action, which lasted from ten o'clock until evening, I was compelled to draw off the detachment and return to the strong stockades which had been exacuated by the enemy at Jattapar on the 16th instant leaving two European officers and one hundred and fifty men (between the enemy and our present position) at the strong post of Tals a as a measure of observation and safety

3 1 ngret to say that our loss has been severe -- one European officer killed, one lentenant-colonel wounded slightly, on critain and one ensign wounded dangerously, and about one hundred and fifty men killed and wounded

1 I have not as yet been alle to ascertain the exact extent of our loss but as soon as I collect the returns, I shall have the longer to forward them

- 5 The enemy's force may be fairly computed at two thousand Burmahs, including cavalry, and they fought with a bravery and olstoney which I have nover witnessed in any troops is impossible to estimate their loss but it must be very severe
- 6 Our troops behaved with their usual stealiness and gallantry, and retired with the heavy guns in the best order

P S -The returns having been received, they are herewith enclosed

Nominal roll of officers killed and wounded

1 10th Bengal Nature Infantry - Incutenant A B Armstrong, killed Lieutenant Colonel H Bowen (slightly) Ensign H M Graves (slightly), and Ensign C S Barberic (dangerously)

wounded 2 23rd Native Infailty - Captain J Johnston, dangeroutli wor nde l

Report from Lieutenant Colonel H Bo con Commanding the detachment at Kachar to Lieutenant Colonel Nicol Adjutant General of the Army Head Quarters dated Camp near Jatrap ir, the 25th February 1824

I regret to have to report to you that Lieutenaut A B Armstrong of the 1st Battalion 10th Regiment Native Infantry, was killed in action with the Burmese on the 21st instant at Dudhpath Tirs valuable officer was shot at the head of the grenad ers, among the stakes and spring guns which were planted all round the enemy's stockades outside for a distance of from twenty to thirty yards, concealed for the most part in long grass

2. It is my painful duty to mention, by this opportunity, that Captain Johnston, of the 23rd Regiment Native Infantry, and Ensign Barberie, of the 10th Regiment Native Infantry, are m a very dangerous state; the former was shot through the thigh bone, and the latter had his leg shattered to pieces, and it has since been amputated. I trust it will not be considered presumption in me to express my hope that something may be done for these two officers in the event of their recovery, and in consideration of their brave and gallant conduct in the actions of the 13th, 18th, and 21st instant.

3. Captain Johnston has been twenty years in the army, has seen much actual service, has never been absent from his corps during all that time (except on sick certificate for four months), and has rendered me the greatest assistance throughout.

4. I cannot close this letter without deeply lamenting our failure at Dudhpatli, and the loss we have sustained, and I sincerely hope His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will concur in opinion with Mr. Scott, the Governor-General's Agent, and myself, that we were justified in following up our former rapid successes in our attack at Dudhpatli, in order to prevent the junction of the Assamese and Burmese armies, and the invasion of our own territories, which they had repeatedly threatened by letter, since (notwithstanding our failure) it has caused the enemy to evacuate their strong stockades at and around Dudhpath, and to proceed in disorder in the direction of Manipur and Assam, of which authentic accounts reached me yesterday.

5. It has now been ascertained by people sent to examine the evacuated stockades at Dudhpatli, that the enemy had between four and five hundred men killed and wounded. They were wholly composed of Burmese, and they fought desperately, reserving their fire to the last moment, and seldom missing their object.

6 I beg leave to supply an omission in my report of this affair, under date the 22nd instant, and to state that Major Newton, with one bundred and fifty men of the detachment left to protect the stockades at Jatrapur, joined me by order on the evening of the 20th near Dudhpatli.

After his repulse at Dudhpatli, Lieutenant-Colonel Bowen fell back to Jatrapur, at which place Lieutenant-Colonel Innes arrived on the 27th February with a reinforcement, consisting of the 2nd Battalion 19th Bengal Native Infantry * and four guns. A renewed attack on the stockade at Dudhpatli was organized, but the Burmese, contented apparently with the triumph they had achieved, and unwilling to try conclusions with a stronger force, abandoned the post and retreated into Manipur. Kachar was thus relieved of the presence of the enemy and difficulties in the way of supplies rendering it impossible to maintain the British troops in that state, the whole, with the exception of a small detachment of the Rangpur Light Infantry, were withdrawn to Sylhet. Nothing more of importance occurred on the Sylhet frontier for some months.

We must now return for a time to the Chittagong frontier. The detachment left on the island of Shahpuri was withdrawn in January 1824, on account of the extreme unhealthiness of the post, and at the same time communication was opened with the Governor of Arakan in view to all matters in dispute being settled. This effort at negociation proved fruitless; the Burmese governor demanded the immediate surrender of Shahpuri and a specific acknowledgment that it belonged to Ava, and on the demand being rejected, he assembled a large force on the frontier, in view to taking forcible possession of the island. This force was soon after placed under the command of Maha Bandula, the most successful of the Burmeso generals, of whom mention has already been made in treating of the affairs of Assam. While affairs were in this threatening state, though negociations were still pending, the Burmese treacherously seized and carried off the commander and a boat's crew of the Company's pilot vessel Sophia, which had been stationed off Shahpuri after the troops had been withdrawn, in order to prevent, as far as possible, its re-occupation by a Burmeso This wanton outrage tended much to precipitate a war that was rapidly becoming unavoidable Such an insult could not be allowed to pass unnoticed, and when the Burmese followed up the proceeding by sending over a small detachment and re-hoisting their flag on Shahpuri, it became evident that negociation was powerless to place matters on a proper footing, and it was accordingly decided, after due deliberation, to let the Kingdom of Ava have experience of the war which it had so hotly desired and so wantonly provoked.

To a semi-barbarous people like the Burmese, a formal declaration of war possesses little meaning. In accordance, however, with the practice of civilised nations, the Governor-General in Council published a declaration (addressed to the Government of Ava and to the princes and people of India) setting forth the ground on which the British Government felt itself compelled to resort to hostilities, and this was followed up by a public proclamation declaring war against the Sovereign of Ava.

Declaration on the part of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Osincil, dated Fort William, the 24th February 1824

During a long course of years, the relations of peace and friendship have been established between the Honograble East India Company and the State of Ava, by public engagements and by the mutually beneficial intercourse of trade and commerce. Supreme Government of India, scrupplously adhering to the obligation of public faith, and cordially solicitous to cultivate a good understanding with all surrounding States, has never ceased to manifest, in a special degree, its desire to cement and improve the relations of amity subsisting with the Court of Ava It is notorious however, that, notwithstanding the uniformly pacific and conciliatory demeanour of the British Government, the Sovereign of Ava has, in repeated instances, committed or sanctioned acts of provocation and aggression which have more than once placed the two countries on the brink of hostilities, and the natural consequences of which have been averted only by the moderation and forbearance of the British power, conscious of its superior strength and resources, and naturally disposed to make the largest allowances for the peculiar character of the people and the government

Ot late, the Burman monarch, emboldened by a career of successful encroachment against the petry States intervening between the two empires, and more especially elated by the conquest of Assam, has dared to offer injury to the British power, under curcumstances of studied insult, menace and defiance, each as no government, alive to a score of honour, and duly mindful of its safety and best interests, can suffer to pass unavenged

In the prosecution of a singularly wanton and unfounded claim to the island of Shahpun, situated at the southern extremity of the Chittegong district, the Barman chief styled the Rajah of Arakan addressed a letter to the Governor-General in August last, demanding, under the implied alternative of a rupture with the State of Ava, the removal of a small guard which had been stationed on that island as an arrangement purely of police. No time was lost in replying to this letter by a temperate exposition of the undeniable title of the British Government to the place, as established, no less by its position on the British side of the main channel of the Naf, than by the indisputable evidence of the public records. The Governor-General on the same occasion expressed his persuasion that the tone assumed in the Rajah's letter had leen adopted without due reflection, and that neither that nor the abrupt and unwarrantable demand for the evacuation of Shahpuri could have been authorised by the Government of Ava. An offer was further made, should the arguments contained in the letter fail to satisfy the Rajah's mind as to the justice of our title, to dounts an officer during the approaching cold season to afford additional explanation on the spot, and to adjust all disputed boundary questions appertaining to the Chittagong frontier in concert with the Commissioners from Arakan.

Some of the subordinate Arakanese authorities having previously declared in writing to the local officers of the Chutagong district that the British guard, if not speedly withdrawn from the island of Shahpair, would be attacked and foreibly expelled, they were, in reply, distinctly warned, inner orders from the Governor-General in Council, that any such procedure must be resented by the British Government as an act of positive hoefility,

The language of the Barmahs, in their official communications with the British officers, had been ever of a singularly boastful, assuming, and even uselent strain, and adverting to this habitual, extravagance of tone, and to the fact that the Government of Avaitizelf had never raised a claim, nor addressed any representation to the Supreme Government on the subject of this paltry object of contention, it was not imagined that the Amkanese rulers sensusly meditated the execution of their threat.

It was therefore with equal astonishment and indignation that the Governor-General in Council learnt early in October last that the Burnese chiefs of Arakan called the four Rajabs, after suddenly assembling an unusual force at their Irontier posts on the Nat, had, under cover of the night, deliberately attacked our guard on the island, consisting of a Junualer and twelve privates of the Chittagong Provincial Battalion, whom they forced to retire, after killing or wounding exis of our men. The Rajabs at the same time scalulously unomalgated, both verbally and in writing? that

About the middle of Jinnary, this pacific aspect of affairs was suddenly changed and all firendly intercourse suspended by the arrival of a military officer of the highest rank, at the head of large reinforcements, accompanied by two commissioners from the capital, vested with extensive powers, and bringing positive orders to dislodge the English, at whatever hazard, from the island of Shahpuri. The purport of these orders was ostentatiously proclaimed, with a distinct intimation that any attempt on our part to interrupt their execution would be considered tantamount to a declaration of var between the two states. The first act of the commissioners was to cross over in state to the disputed island obviously for the purpose of

For many years past the parties dividing authority and tor many years proceed parents dividing authority and struggling for ascendancy in the Raj of Kachar had incessantly applied to the British Government, soliciting it to interfere as the paramount State, to settle the affairs of that country Its internal dissensions had frequently disturbed the tranquility of the adjoining district of Sylhet and the Governor General in Council having satisfied himself that Kachar was altogether in dependent of the Burmese and that the measure could afford no just ground of umbrage to that Government adopted a resolution on the 19th June last to take the country avowedly under protection on the usual conditions of political dependence Whilst arrangements and negotiations were in train for defining the terms of our connection with the chief whom it was determin ed to reinstate in possession and who was residing under British protection within the Honourable Company's territory intelligence arrived from Assam that the Burmese were preparing an army to invide and conquer Kachar The Governor General's Agent on the North East Frontier lost no time in addressing letters to the Burmese Governor of Assam briefly apprising him of the nature of our views and measures in regard to the Raj of Kachar and calling upon him to desist from any project of molesting that country The outrage at Shahpuri having in the interval occurred the Agent subsequently warned the Burman authorities under the express instructions of Government that their occu pation of Kachar would not be permitted as independently of the resolution recently taken by the British Government to pro teet that territory it could not without a culpable dereliction of duty and a disregard of the plainest maxims of prudence allow the Burmese to advance unopposed to a position the command of which would so greatly ficilitate the execution of the threat of invasion repeatedly pronounced by their countrymen in other quarters The only answer returned to these communications was that orders had arrived from the King of Ava to follow up and apprehend certain Manipurian chiefs (peaceably residing within the British territory) wherever they might be found, that these orders would be executed without any respect to territory or jurisdiction and that the Burmahs were not to be hindered from carrying into effect the mandates of their sovereign by any opposition which the British authorities might offer

It soon appeared that an army had been assembled in the Burman dependency of Manipur as well as in Assam for the execution of the fresh purpose of aggression now distinctly threatened On the advance of the invading force from the eastward, the Acting Magistrate of Sylhet addressed letters of remonstrance, under the orders of Government, to the military chiefs in command, of a purport and tendency similar to those which had been previously transmitted to the commander of the forces in Assam

Totally disregarding, however, the intimation thus explicitly given by the British Government, of its determination to resist their occupation of Kachar, on grounds the justice of which cannot be questioned, and anxious only to effect their object of concentrating a large army on the immediate frontier of the Company's possessions, the parties from the northward and eastward hurried on, by forced marches, in avowed defiance of our remonstrances, and effected a junction at Jatrapur, only five miles from the frontier of Sylhet, where they entrenched themselves in extensive and formidable stockades Happily, a party of observation had been advanced to the frontier on the first intelligence of the near approach of the forces of the King of Ava. of suffieient strength to keep them in check and prevent any actual violation of the British territory in that quarter. But the injury already sustained by their advance has been serious, no less to the suffering country of Kachar, than to the district of Sylhet, throughout which a general alarm has been spread, causing many of our ryots to abandon their homes, and materially impeding the The Governor General in Council has therefore ordered the advance of the force assembled at Goalpara into the territory of Assam, to disledge the enemy from the commanding position which they occupy at the head of the Brahmaputra, and is prepared to pursue such other measures of offensive warfare as the honour, the interests and the safety of the British Government demand recourse to at the present crisis

Annous however to avert the calamities of war and return ing an unfergued desire to avail itself of any proper opening which may arise for un accommodation of differences with the King of Ava before hostilities shall have been pushed to an exterine length the British Government will be prepared even jet to listen to pacific overtures on the part of his Burmese majesty provided that they are accompanied with the tender of adequate apology and involve the concession of such terms as are indispensible to the future security and tranquillity of the eastern frontier of Bengal

Proclamation by the Right Honourable the Governor General in Council, dated Fort William the 5th March 1821

The conduct of the Burmese having compelled the British Government to have recourse to arms in support of its rights and honour, the Governor General in Council hereby notifies that the Government of Ava is placed in the condition of a public enemy and that all British subjects whether European or Native are prohibited from holding any communication with the people of that State until the differences now unhappily existing shall be terminated.

The Governor General in Council deems it proper to take this opportunity of publicly declaring the causes that have led it he thitten with a State between which and the Honourable Last India Company a friendly intercourse has long subsisted, to the great advantage of both parties, and with which the Brit is Government has invariably sought to cultivate and main tain the relations of aunity

Solicitous, however, to preserve with all nations the relations of peace, the British Government has considered it to be in an especial manner its duty to make large allowances for the peculiar circumstances and character of the Burmese Government and people. The consciousness of its power to repel and punish aggression has strengthened the motives of forbearance towards a nation removed, by their geographical situation, from the immediate circle of our political relations, and with whom (as we have no opposing interests) the Supreme Government sought only to maintain a commercial intercourse on terms of equality and freedom, conducive to the welfare and prosperity of both countries.

So long, therefore, as the aggressions of which the British Government had to complain could be treated as the unauthorised acts of the subordinate officers of the Burmese Government, and could be tolerated consistently with the national honour and the security of the British territories, the Supreme Government sedulously endeavoured to preserve unimpaired the existing relations of peace and friendship, notwithstanding provocations which would have fully justified, and from a state more formidable in position and resources would have imperiously demanded, a resort to arms.

Trusting that the motives of its conciliatory demeanour could not have been misunderstood, the British Government persuaded itself that the Government of Ava, however extravagant in its pretensions, must have been no less desirous than ourselves to maintain a friendly intercourse so profitable to that country, and could not but be sensible that as our moderation was founded on a consciousness of our strength, and on a general desire to preserve the blessing of peace, so our forbearance would not be carried beyond the limits where it ceased to be compatible with the safety of our subjects, the integrity of our dominions, and the honour of our country.

Unhappily these expectations have been disappointed. The Burmese Government, actuated by an extravagant spirit of pride and ambition, and elated by its conquests over the petty tribes by which it is surrounded, has ventured to violate the British territories, to attack and slay a party of British sepoys, to seize and imprison British subjects, to avow extensive schemes of mischievous aggressions, and to make hostile preparations on our frontier, that leave no doubt of its intention to execute its insolent and unjustifiable threats.

In prosecution of a groundless claim to the island of Shahpuri, the Burmese chiefs of Arakan, in a time of profound peace, and without any previous attempt at negotiation on the part of their government, attacked, under cover of night, a small guard of British troops stationed on that island for purposes of police, and drove them from their post with the loss of several lives. No answer has been returned by the Court of Amarapura to the demand of explanation and atonement which it was of course tle duty of the British Government instantly to prefer, but which was made in the same spirit of conciliation which land always characterised our communications with the Court of Ava On the contrary, the Burmese local authorities have distinctly declared the determination of their sovereign to invade the British dominions unless their groundless claim to Shahpuri is unequivocally admitted.

Subsequently to the attack on the island of Shahpuri, the commanding officer and several of the crew of the Honfurable Company's schooner Sophia were insidiously entired on shore, and carried into the interior by the order of commissioners specially deputed to Arakan by the Burmese Court, and although subsequently released, they have been sent back without any explanation or apology for the insulting outrage.

The Burmese generals on the north-east have, at the same moment, advanced their troops into the country of Kachar, and occupied a post within only five miles of the frontier of Sylhet, notwithstanding that they were distinctly warned by the British authorities in that quarter that the petty State of Kachar was under the protection of the British Government, and that the movement of their troops must be regarded as an act of hostility to be repelled by force. In both quarters the Burmese chiefs have publicly declared their determination to enter the British territories in pursuit of alleged offenders against the Government of Ava, and have-avowed intentions of open hostility as the alternative of our-refusing to comply with their unjust and utterly inadmissible pretensions.

The deliberate silence of the Court of Amarapura, as well as the combination and extent of the operations undertaken by its officers, leave it no longer doubtful that the acts and declarations of the subordinate authorities are fully sanctioned by their sovereign, and that that haughty and barbarous Court is not only determined to withhold all explanation and atonement for past injuries, but meditates projects of the most extravagant and unjustifiable aggression against the British Government.

The Governor-General in Council, therefore, for the safety of our subjects and the security of our districts, already seriously alarmed and injured by the approach of the Burmese armies, has felt himself imperatively called on to anticipate the threatened invasion. The national honour no less obviously requires that atonement should be had for wrongs so wantonly inflicted and so insolently maintained, and the national interests equally demand that we should seek by an appeal to arms that security against future insult and aggression which the arrogance and grasping spirit of the Burmese Government have denied to friendly expostulation and remonstrance.

With these views and purposes, the Governor-General in Council has deemed it an act of indispensable duty to adopt such measures as are necessary to vindicate the honour of the British Government, to bring the Burmese to a just sense of its character and rights, to obtain an advantageous adjustment of our eastern boundary, and to preclude the recurrence of similar insult and aggression in future.

Still animated by a sincere desire for peace, and utterly averse from all purposes of aggrandizement, the Governor-General in Council will rejoice if the objects above mentioned can be accomplished without carrying the war to extremities. But to whatever length the conduct of the Burmese Government may render it necessary to prosecute hostilities, His Lordship in Council relies with confidence on the justice of our cause, on the resources of the Government, and on the approved valour of our troops, for the early and successful termination of the contest.

By command of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

(Signed) GEORGE SWINTON, Secretary to Government.

The reply of Ava to this declaration was contained in a communication from the Viceroy of Pegu, reasserting the claim to Shahpuri, Chittagong and Dacca, and advising the Governor-General, if he desired peace, to address a petition to Maha Bandula, who had been invested with authority to settle the matters in dispute.

The measures which, under the advice of the Commander in Chief (General Sir Edward Paget, GCB), the British Government in India decided on adopting for the prosecution of the war were as follows:—

I.—The expulsion of the Burmese from the territory they had recently annexed in Assam.

II —To despatch an expedition by sea to subdue the maritime provinces of Ava, and, if possible, penetrate to the capital by the line of the Irrawadi river.

III.—To maintain a defensive attitude for the present on the Sylhet and Chittagong frontiers, merely strengthening the forces there so as to prevent any further incursions from the Burmese forces in Manipur and Arakan.

In conveying the Commander-in-Chief's opinion on this defensive policy, the Adjutant-General wrote as follows:—

"Any military attempt beyond this upon the internal dominions of the King of Ava His Excellency is inclined to deprecate, as, instead of armies, fortresses and cities, he is led to believe we should find nothing but jungle, pestilence and famine."

How the proposed measures were carried out is now to be related.

OPERATIONS IN ASSAM, CHITTAGONG AND KACHAR.

WITHIN a short time after the declaration of war, the force destined for the expulsion of the Burmese from Assam was assembled at Goalpara. It consisted of the following theory:—

A detachment of artillery (six 6-pounders.)

A detachment of irregular horse.* Seven companies of the 2nd Battalion 23rd Bengal

Native Infantry.

Six companies of the Rangpur Light Infantry.

The Dinajpur Local Infantiy.

A wing of the Champaran Light Infantry.†

The command was given to Lieutenaut-Colonel Macmorine, 2nd Battalion 21st Native Infantry,‡ then commanding the troops on the Eastern Frontier, and Captain Bayldon, 1st Battalion 6th Native Infantry,§ was appointed Brigade-Major.

The force moved forward from Goalpara on the 13th March 1821, taking the route along the bunks of the Brahmaputra, and advancing on Gauhati, where the Bunnese had stockaded themselves. On arriving there, however, on the 28th, Colonel Macmorine found that the enemy had abandoned their position and fled. After a pause, on account of want of information regarding the roads and the position of the enemy, Lieutenant-Colonel Richards, with a wing of the 2nd Battahon 23rd Native

Infantry, was sent forward to Naugaon (Nowgong) Thence he advanced to Kaliabar, a post near the junction of the Kallang and Brahmaputra rivers, and to Hautbar, where the Burmese had entrenched themselves; but on the approach of Colonel Richards, they abandoned their stockades and retreated to Rangligarh, another of their posts some twenty miles further on. They returned, however, a few days later to re-occupy the deserted stockade, when they were met by a detachment under the command of Lieutenant Richardson, 2nd Battalion 23rd Native Infantry, who defeated them with considerable loss.

The main body under Colonel Richards remained at Kaliabar, a small party only being detached to hold the stockade at Hautbar. This party the enemy attempted to cut off, but Captain Horsburgh, 2nd Battalion 23rd Native Infantry, who commanded at Hautbar, inflicted on them so severe a defeat that they abandoned Rangligarh and retreated in great haste to Maura Mukh, where the Governor of Assam now concentrated the whole of his forces. Soon after this, the setting in of the rainy season brought the operations to a close, and, for reasons of supply, Colonel Richards (now in command of the whole force in Assam, in consquence of the death of Colonel Macmorine from cholera) found it necessary to fall back on Gauhati. With the exception of the capture of a stockade on the northern bank of the Brahmaputia by Captain Wallace at the head of some of the Rangpur Light Infantry, nothing further noteworthy occurred in Assam for some months.

The despatches and reports describing these operations are subjoined:-

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Macmorine, Commanding the Eastern Frontier, to Lieutenant-Colonel Nicol, Adjutant-General of the Army, dated Camp Gauhats, the 22nd May 1621

You have been already apprised that Lieutenant-Colonel Richards had been detached to the eastward with the flotilla and 2nd Battalion 23rd Native Infantry (not having at the time tonnage for the conveyance of more troops), to take up a position at Kahabar for the purpose of giving Protection to the country.

Extract from a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Richards, Commanding the advanced force in Assam, to Captain Bayldon, Major of Brigade at Gaukati, dated on the Kallang river, near Rangligarh, tho 26th May 1821.

I have the pleasure to report, for the information of Brigadier Macmorine, that the enemy got a good drubbing from Captain Horsburgh's detachment on the evening of the 23rd instant. The Brigadier is aware that I posted Captain Horsburgh, with four companies and the resalla, in the stockade at Hautbar from which the enemy were driven by Lieutenant Richardson on the 17th instant. This position the enemy had the temerity to advance upon, with the view, it is supposed, of attacking it, for they were within three hundred yards before they were discovered by some of the camp followers, who were driven in. The enclosed is Captain Horsburgh's report to me. By his account it appears the enemy suffered a good deal, and about two hundred men were deprived of their arms. This defeat induced them to evacuate their stockade at Rangligarh yesterday morning, which Captain Horsburgh has destroyed.

Letter from Captain Horsburgh, Commanding a detachment of the 23rd Native Infantry, to Lieutenant-Colonel Richards, Commanding the advance in Assam, dated Kaliabar, the 24th May 1821.

The enemy have had the hardthood to come out of their stockade and attack our party, for which I am happy to say that some of them have paid dearly.

About 3 o'clock this afternoon there was an alarm given that the enemy were cutting up our grass-cutters. The picket marched out, and I got the rest of the men quickly under arms,—cavalry as well as infantry. When I came out to the picket I found them carrying on a brisk fire (Lieutenant Jones at its head) with the enemy, who were in the jungle to the right of the road, where they had planted a number of jinjuls. I sent Lieutenant Jones to the right with the cavalry, with directions to endeavour (if possible) to get into their rear and intercept their retreat to their stockade at Rangligarh.

I ordered the picket to proceed along the banks of the river, and went myself with two companies into the jungle on the right of the road, advancing down in as g od a line as the thick jungle would admit. The enemy only fired their jinjale once, and fled through the jungle, leaving their jinjale behind. In the meantime Lieutenant Jones, by dashing across with the horsemen to the river, succeeded in cutting off the retreat of about two hundred. Some escaped by swimming, about forty were killed by the sowars, a number were drowned, and several sabred or shot in the water The picket which had marched along the banks of the river got up in time to kill several in the water. Several of the enemy on horseback attempted to escape by swimming their horses, but were thrown from their saddles in the middle of the river; their horses or tattoos, swimming back, fell into our hands We captured about seven tattoos, about eighteen jinjals, two very good brass drums, and a number of old muskets, &c, and several of the jingals were loaded and contained seven balls.

I am happy to say we have suffered no loss among the sepoys, either killed or wounded.

I am, however, sorry to say that a daffadar of Gilbert's Horse* was shot through the body, and is since dead; three horses only were wounded

Licutenant Jones on this occasion acted with a great deal of credit to humself, and but for his exertions, the enemy would have got back to their stockade with a trifling loss indeed. I fear, however, about three hundred of the enemy regained their stockade

On the Chittagong frontier our affairs at this, the opening, stage of the war assumed an aspect the reverse of favorable. The force in that province, under the command of Colonel Shapland, consisted of the left wing of the 2nd Battalion 13th+, five companies of the 2nd Battalion 20th‡, and the whole of the 1st Battalion 23rd Bengal Native Infantry, § together with the Chittagong Provincial Battalion, a newly raised Magh Levy, and a detachment of artillery, the whole amounting to about 3,000 men. These troops were concentrated at Chittagong, with the exception of a detachment under the command of Captain Noton, 1st Battalion 23rd, consisting of five companies of that battalion, and portions of the Provincial Battalion and Magh Levy, with two guns, which was in advance at Rami, to check any attempt the enemy might make from Arakan. In that province the Burmese had concentrated a force of upwards of ten thousand men, under the command of Maha Bandúla, and early in May 1824 a portion of this army crossed the Naf and took up a position at Ratnapallang, about fourteen miles to the south of Ramú Captain Noton attempted to dislodge them, but was unsuccessful, and returned to Ramú, where he was joined by three companies of the 2nd Battalion 20th Bengal Native Infantry, a reinforcement which brought has force up to a strength of about one thousand men Encouraged by Captain Noton's want of success, the Burmese pushed on to Ramu, where, after some sovere fighting, they, on the 17th May 1821, succeeded in defeating and almost annihilating the British force opposed to them. The officer in command having been killed, no formal despatch describing the disaster at Ramu was ever written, but full particulars of these affaus will be found in the following documents.

Report from Captain T Noton, to the Major of Brigade at Chittagong, dated Camp Ramú, the 12th May 1821

On the 11th instant, a nail from the Ratnapallang stockade came in with a Bengali villager, stating that the latter had seen the enemy advancing upon Ratnapallang with four chiefs and about one hundred and fifty men, wishing to negotiate, which the nail also stated to be the case

- 2 Concerving this to be some design of the enemy to put the jemadar off his guard and thereby more easily gain possession of the stochade I determined upon moving with the whole of my disposable force to ascertain what their intentions were, leaving the convalescents of the 23rd, the whole of the Provincials, and one hundred Maghs to protect the cantonments and sick, in case the enemy might detach a party to outflank me
 - I moved off about 5 PM, the detachment of the 23rd Native Infantry leading On our arriving near to the stockade (about half a mile) a heavy fire was opened upon us from the hills on the left of the road which the enemy had taken possession of in numbers and fortshed. Their larger guns were fired from the further hill and the smaller ones from the lower, thereby completely commanding the road The nark of the Provincial Battalion, who had come to give the report with the Bengali in the first instance, told me that we were very near the plain where the stockade was , I consequently pushed on with the detachment of the 23rd and reached the plain. I then returned with a few men to bring on the guns directing Ensign Campbell to follow, should I not youn him in a short time It was then to my disappointment, that I found that two of the elephants had thrown their loads and blocked up the road. This Captain Pringle reported to me, was the fault of the makeuts

- 4 To extricate the guir which together with the gear was hanging to the elephant we were digid to cut the ropes, but from the mequrience of Lacutenant Scott (having never seen guins carried on dephants before) and none of the golandar being treat, after many trials and failing in all I was obliged to leave it and take steps for carrying away the ammunition which the other elephant had thrown off and also that which had been left on the rad by some coolies who had run off. Pravious to this I had been joined by Linsigh Campbell. We with difficulty succeeded in getting it away chiefly by the exertions of the secretion of a very few, who assisted the sepoys. After this was effected I proceeded quietly with a small party of sepoys and an elephant, and brought in the guir with as many things as I could find though several articles are missing.
 - 5 To give the men some rest and an opportunity of procuring water I took up a position on the plain and there remain id on the alert during the night. One of the Maghs fanced he saw some Burmalis creeping towards us and commenced a run ning fire which was with difficulty stopped otherwise we remained quiet. The enemy were firing and shouting the whole time. From the circumstance of the ammunition coolies having deserted and the gins being rendered perfectly useless by the great deficiency in the detail of artillery and not placing any confidence in the Maghs for support should we again have experienced a fire from the hills even by taking a circumtous route and there being no possibility of procuring supplies for the men. I deemed it most prudent to return again to Runú there to await the arrival of Coptain Trueman's detachment* as well as to obtain further in formation as to the strength of the cnemy s force.
 - 6 On my return to Ramú I was surprised to hear that the jemadar with his party from Ratnapallang had arrived about two hours before
 - 7 I regret to say our loss has been severe in all soven missing and eleren wounded. I am sorry to say that Easign Bennett is among the latter being severely wounded in the left mit though I trust not of any very serious consequence. Lasign Campbell likewise received a hurt in the right ankle from a spent ball and also some shots in his legs. The whole of the wounded are doing well
 - 8 I beg leave to state that there were a few of the Magh Levy that were under the immediate eye of Captain Pringle (to whom every credit is due for his evertions) who behaved with great coolness, and much to my satisfaction, as well in firing upon the enemy as in assisting our troops in carrying off the ammunition. The men of the detachment of the 23rd Native Infantry advanced with great steadiness, notwithstanding the suddenness of the attack upon them and the very heavy fire that was kept up for upwards of three hours from a hidden foe; and I deem it but justice to Ensigns Campbell and Bennett on the occasion to report that they both deserved the greatest credit for their coolness and evertions throughout.

 I beg to add that Lieutenant Scott showed every anxiety to bring the guns forward, but was prevented by the circumstances above mentioned.

Extract from a despatch from Lieutenant-Colonel Shapland, C.B., Commanding the Chittogong Frontier, dated the 18th May 1821.

It is with the utmost concern that I have to report, for the information of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that as I was making preparations for advancing from this place towards the frontier, I received the melancholy intelligence of Captain Noton's detachment having been completely destroyed by the Burmese force on the 17th instant.

2. I received this information from Captain Brandon, commanding the left wing of the 23rd Regiment, who is, of course, retring to join me. Under the present circumstances, I intend to recross the Sankar river, which is immediately behind me, and retree to Chittagong to provide for the defence of that station.

Extract from a report from Lieutenant-Colonel Pocoleri, Commanding at Chittagong, to the Adjutant-General of the Army, dated the 19th May 1824

With deep regret I acquaint you, for the information of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, with the reports which reached me last night that Captain Noton's detachment of the chief part of the right wing of the Ist Battalion 23rd Regiment, are cut off, after hard fighting the whole of the 16th. I fear all the officers have fallen but Lieutenant Scott, of the Artillery, who escaped, wounded. Captain Brandon, with the left wing, learning the disaster, is returning, he will retreat on Brigader Shapland's division. The officers who will have fallen are Captain Noton, Lieutenant Grigg, Ensigns Campbell and Bennett, 1st Battalion 23rd Regiment, Captain Trueman and Lieutenant Codrington 2nd Battalion 20th Regiment, Doctor Mayamor, Artillery Contain Pringle, Magh Lev

Commanding the Chiliagong Frontier, dated the 20th May 1821

I have the honour to report for His Lxcellency the Comman der in Chief that being joined by the detachment of the 1st Bat talion 23rd Native Infantry Regiment I returned to Chittagong this morning with the detachment which was advancing towards Ramd when the disastrous event occurred at that place

I enclose a report of the officers who have escaped after the action

Report of the action at Ramá received from Lieutenant Scott, Lieutenant Codrington and Ensign Campbell dated Chiltagong the 20th May 18°4

Information having been required relative to the retreat of Captain Noton's detachment from Rainfi on the 17th instant we being the only surviving officers beg leave to forward a condensed statement of the circumstances which have fallen under our observation for the information of Brigadier Shapland CB commanding the district.

- 2 The Burmese amounting it is supposed to ten thousand men, advanced on Ramá from the Ratinapallang road and encamped on the south side of the river on the 13th instant. On the following evening being within guishot and advancing apparently with the intention of fording the river a party with two six pounders, under the command of Captain Trueman was detached for the purpose of annoying the enemy and frustrating any attempt to cross This our troops effected.
- 3 On the 15th however the enemy at 8 AM advanced and commenced entrenching themselves about three hundred yards in front of our position the right flank of which was protected by the river and by a tank about sixty paces in advance. This being strounded by a high embankment serving as a breast work was occupied by the picket who opened and kept up without intermision a fire on the enemy during the whole day and following might. Our position was strengthened in the rear by a similar tank to that in front for the defence of which a strong detachment from the Provincial Battalon and Magh Levy was allotted.
 - 4 On the morning of the 16th it was discovered that the enemy had during the night opened trenches on our left flank and had considerably advanced those in front A desultory fire as continued during the next twenty four hours from each tank, but with little effect on either side

the enemy had carried on their trenches to within twelve paces of the picket, and had also approached to within a short distance of the tank in our rear. They gained possession of the latter about 10 AM, the troops defending it having quitted their post and fled with precipitation. The consternation caused by this quickly spread, and they were almost immediately followed by the remainder of the Magh Levy The elephants (on one of which Lieutenant Scott, who had been severely wounded, was tied) were alarmed at the tumult, and fled

Shortly after this (our rear being now undefended) Captain Noton ordered a retreat which was effected in good order for about half a mile, the two six pounders being from necessity abandoned. The enemy's cavalry, however, pressing hard upon the rear of the column, a square was ordered to be formed, but in consequence of the excessive fatigue and privation which the troops had previously undergone, rendering them absolutely incapable of offering any effectual resistance to the overwhelming masses of the enemy pouring in on them on every side, the utmost exertions of the officers to preserve discipline were unavailing and on our arrival at the river, the sepoys dispersed in every direction, and individual safety became the primary object of each Under these lamentable circumstances, Ensures Codrington and Camp bell having seen the other officers cut to pieces by the enemy, together with the greater part of the detachment, and deeming all further chance of resistance hopeless escaped, the former, closely pursued to Cox s Bazar and thence by water to Chittagong, and the latter who was slightly wounded, by a circuitous route through the bills to the same place *

Extracts from the " Government Gazette"

July 8th, Ramá.—As the details hitherto published of the affair at Ramá convey but an imperfect notion of the whole circumstances which occurred on that disastrous occasion, we avail ourselves of * * * a narrative drawn up by one of the surviving officers * * *

The narrative is nearly as follows -

On the morning of the 13th, the enemy appeared, advancing from Ramkot and the Ratnapallang road, and occupied, as they arrived, the hills east of Ramu. The picket under the officer on duty was detached to reconnoitre and oppose any attempt of the enemy to ford the river, with orders also to fire on them if they approached within musket-shot on the opposite bank. The enemy remained stationary till about 3 PM, when a large body (probably half their force) took up a position under the hills to the southward, which led us to expect that they would attack us in the course of the night, and the troops accordingly remained under arms. The enemy, however, engaged themselves strengthening their position with breast-works, and about noon, on the following day, abandoned it, and rejoined the other body. On their way they halted, and Captain Noton communicated with two horsemen, who approached the opposite bank of the river, who disavowed any hostile intention of the Burmese towards us, but desired only that some rebellious subjects under our protection should be delivered up to them, offering at the same time to explain further the views of the Burmese, provided Captain Noton would allow them to cross the river with a guard of one hundred horsemen, and guarantee the safety of that party. Cantain Noton, however, placing little confidence in these assertions, rejected their proposal, and the enemy again moved off. The horsemen appeared to be Mussulmen of Hindoostan, and one of them mentioned his having been formerly in Skinner's Horse, and repeated, as a proof of it, the names of several officers in the Honourable Company's service. We had no means of ascertaining correctly the numbers of the enemy's force, but from their occupying, when encamped, an extent of ground upwards of a mile in length, it was generally considered that they could not have amounted to less than ten thousand fighting men (including about two hundred cavalry), besides at least an equal number of coolies and camp followers. Captain Noton's force consisted of the right wing of the 1st Battalion 23rd Native Infantry, which had been reduced by sickness to about two hundred and fifty men fit for duty three companies of the 2nd Battalion 20th Nativo Infantry, not exceeding one hundred men about two hundred and fifty of the Provincial Battalion and four hundred of the Magh Levy—amounting altogether to 1000 men. Although Captain Noton placed hithe confidence on the Provincials from their conduct on a former occasion or on the Magh Levy, from the little military instruction they had received and the short period they had been in the service yet so confidently did he depend on being joined in a day or two by reinforcements from Chittagong that he determined with the concurrent opinion of every officer present to defend against such superior numbers the post which he commanded

On the evening of the 14th (the enemy s whole force being concentrated on the opposite bank of the river apparently with an intention of crossing at a favourable opportunity) the two six pounders with Captain Truemans detachment and the picket were detached for the purpose of annoying the enemy in their encampment, and preventing their fording the river, should they attempt it. Several rounds of grape and shrapnel were fired from the six po in lers with effect, and appeared to create much confusion. On our return to camp a party of the enemy came round to the river and the picket was engaged in a sharp skirmish with them the two six pounders returning the fire of their jungals which were quickly silenced. The enemy had in the meantime set fire to most of the surrounding villages and huts and our troops remained on the alert the whole night in expectation of an attrick

On the following morning (15th) the enemy crossed the river unobserved and advanced in great numbers but without any regularity towards a tank of which they took possession Captain Noton directing the picket to occupy the second tank (which as well as all the other tanks was surrounded by a high cumbankment serving as a breast work) took up his position be hind an embankment about three feet high which completely surrounded our camp of which the 20th and 23rd Native Infantry with the two six pounders occupied the front or eastern face the right flank being protected by the river and the tank and the Provincials and Magh Levy (with the exception of a strong party of the former and two bundred and fifty of the latter allotted for the defence of a third tank) were posted on the north face. The two six pounders opened a destructive fire on the enemy at a distance of about two hundred and thirty yards as they ran across the plain to reach the tank, and the picket also commenced a fire on them when within musket shot but they so cautiously concealed themselves in the neighbouring huts and behind trees and so expeditiously entrenched themselves that our fire could not have been very effectual About 10 AM the enemy appearing to meditate an attack on the picket, it was reinforced by the detachment of the 2 20th under Captain Trueman, who shortly afterwards was slightly wounded A party of the Magh Levy had been in the meantime detached to a small spot of rising ground on our left within musket shot of the tank occupied by the enemy on whom they kept up a constant fire the greater part of the day Captain Trueman's detachment after remaining with the picket till sunset and keeping up a desultory fire on the enemy, who exposed themselves as little as possible, was withdrawn leav ing the usual picket of eighty men for the defence of the tank

Information was this day received from Chittagong that the left wing of the 1 23rd Native Infantry under Captain Brandon would leave that place on the 13th and join us with all practi cable expedition and Captain Noton having now every reason to expect with certainty the arrival of this reinforcement on the evening of the 16th persevered in his former determination to defend his post till that time

Captain Pringle commanding the Migh Levy and Ensign Bennett, 23rd Native Infantry were slightly wounded in the course of the day the former whilst trying to restore order amongst a party of Provincials who were quitting their post in confusion and the latter in reinforcing with his company the tank defended by the Provincials who also betrayed symptoms of nlarm The picket continued the fire on the enemy through out the night and on the morning of the 16th it was found that Under such unlooked-for and unfortunate circumstances, Captain Noton at first determined instantly to commence a retreat, which, from the darkness of the night, would have been undertaken at the most favourable opportunity, and with that intention directed Laeutenant Scott (severely wounded) to be fastened on an elephant, to enable him to accompany the detachment. Reluctant, however, to quit the post, which he had so long and so successfully defended, without allowing the enemy to gain a single advantage over him, and anxiously, but confidently, expecting to be joined in a few hours by Captain Brandon's detachment, he at length (depending solely on the courage and good discipline of the regular troops in the event of an attack) once more resolved, with the concurrence of the officers, to hold out till the arrival of the wished for reinforcement, which it was considered could not be delayed beyond the following morning.

The enemy were very active during the night in carrying on their trenches, keeping up, at the same time, a constant fire, which was returned by the picket. On the morning of the 17th, Ensign Campbell, on being relieved from picket duty, was slightly wounded, in passing between the tanks to our position, where the enemy's fire was so severe and dangerous, that Captain Noton had directed the picket to be relieved before daybreak. The enemy's nearest trench appeared, at daybreak, to be within thirty yards of the picket, and shortly afterwards a single man advanced, and being protected from our musketry in a recumbent posture by the raised site of a Bengalı hut, which had been burnt on the preceding day, commenced entrenching himself within twelve paces of the picket. and was quickly joined by numbers from the enemy's main force, The tank in our possession was also similarly invested, and the fire on both sides was now incessant, and at so short a distance proportionably formidable and effectual. At about 9 AM, the Provincials became so alarmed at the near approach of the enemy that they quitted their post and fled with precipitation, the two hundred and fifty of the Magh Levy followed their example, and the tank was instantly taken possession of by the enemy; the remaining body of the Magh Levy almost immediately followed, and the elephants (on one of which Lieutenant Scott was fastened) took fright also, and ran off with the fugitives at full speed.

It will be clearly seen that our position became untenable (or at least comparatively so) the instant that either of the two tanks which we defended fell into the hands of the enemy; and very nearly surrounded as we now were by an enemy, whose numbers were from the first overwhelming, and had been duly increasing ance the 15th, and left to oppose them with a body of men not exceeding four hundred fatigued and exhausted from having con stantly remained under arms day and night since the morning of the 13th without any interval of rest or any other sustenance but that which a handful of rice occasionally afforded them we had 10 other alternative but to attempt a retreat instantly by gle vas sounded repeatedly for the recall of the picket but from the heavy fire which was kept up at the time it was not heard and as there was no time to lose the detachment c m menced its retreat The officer on picket in the meantime totally ignorant of Captain Noton's intention and anxiously look ing out for Captain Brandon's detachment which was erroneously reported to b in sight perceived by chance the retrograde move ment of the detachment after it had proceeded a considerable dis tance The picket yas then instantly withdrawn and joined the main body which (having from necessity abandoned the two six jounders) proceeded in tolerable order for about half a mile keep ing up a desultory fire on the enemy who poured in on us on every side in immense numbers On the arrival of the enemys cavalry who fell upon our rear and cut to pieces numbers of sepoys the detachment quekened its pace, and the utmost combined exertions of the officers to preserve the ranks and effect the forma t on of a square were unavailing and each corps and company pre sently became so intermingled with each other that all order and discipline became at an end. The exertions of the officers both European and Native to restore order vere nevertheless persever td in till our arrival at the river when the detachment dispersed and each seply hastily divesting himself of his arms accountements and clothes plunged into the river and endeavoured to gain the

that either of the remaining officers (Lieutenant Grigg and Dr Maysmor) could have been equally fortunate

It is but justice to the regular troops engaged to state that they behaved with the greatest coolness and havery throughout, and it was not until the enemy's horse had out to preces numbers in our rear that any confusion or alarm was betrayed. The Magh Levy also conducted themselves equally well till the Provincials set them a disgraceful example, which, considering all circumstances, it is not perhaps surprising that they followed.

May 31st, Chritagong —Accounts received from Chritagong between the 22nd and 25th instant represent that tranquilty is greatly restored and that large bodies of the Maghs had arrived in the neighbourhood, whom the Magistrate was endeavouring to settle in some convenient situation, their services being considered of the greatest use in the event of offensive operations, as little reliance could be placed on any other class of the unhabitants.

The following particulars respecting the fate of the officers engaged in the affair at Ramu, had been collected from various accounts given by the sepoys and others who had been present in the action and found their way back to Chittagong Noton, it is said, was cut down by the enemy after the complete dispersion of his detachment. A subadar of the Provincials declares that he saw him spike the two six pounders with his own hand immediately before he fell. Captain Trueman appears to have been destroyed by some of the enemy's horse, when unarmed and defenceless, after the close of the action Lieutenant Grigor is supposed to have fallen by a musket shot during the engage ment. Captain Pringle is said to have been attacked and killed by two of the enemy's cavalry when endeavouring to make his escape on horseback. Ensign Bennett is believed to have been killed while attempting to swim across the Ramú river Of Mi Maysmors fall no particular information had transpired, but there was not the slightest reason to hope that he had escaped

On the 22nd instant a sepoy of the 23rd Regiment, who had been taken prisoner at Ramá, arrived in company with a Bengali Zemindar, bringing a letter from the Burmeso commanders, a translation of which will be found below—

Translation of a letter from the Rajah of Arakan and other Burmese authorities

Our master, the lord of the white elephant, the great chief, the protector of the poor and oppressed, wishes that the people of both countries should remain in prace and quiet.

- 2. The Bengalis of Chittagong excited a dispute about the deep of Shahpuri, which belongs to Arakan. To precent all dissension, by orders of Leumaho Sunadauddee, the general, a letter was sent by Hussain Ulleo Dubashi, to the Judge of Chittagong, who wisely relinquished the deep of Shahpuri as belonging to Arakan After this, some muschievous persons misled the Inglish gentlemen, and 'caused a dispute and an encounter between the Inglish solders and our people, whereon the general advanced from Pegu with a large force into Arakan, and with a view to the tranquility of the two great countries, came to Ratuspullang and sent a message calculated to benefit both parties, through Hussain Ulleo Dubashi, to the Bengali cantain and commandant of the stockade
- 3 Whilo'this conference was going on, a number of Bengali and Magh sepoys arrived from Ramé, and began to fire with musket and cannon at the Burmese, among whom Hussain Ulice was wounded.
- 4 On this, the Burmese also commenced the combat, and putting the Bengril and Might troops to flight, showed forbestance and reframed from Ailing them. The sardars forbade them killing any one. Still in 3 letter came from the Judge of Chittagong, and therefore we remained at Ramé.
- Our solders injured none of the poor inhabitants, and committed no oppressions and destroyed no inhabitants, yet the English gentlemen with the Bengali sepoys, began firing upon us from muskets and cannons. At last the Burmess eardars advanced with a debashe to say which would have contributed to pacify both States. On this, the Bengali sepoys began a fire, which the Burmess were obliged to return, a battle ensued, many were killed, many wounded, and many put to flight. The people of Ramá set fire to their own village and burned it. The Judge and Colonel of Chittagong the generals and chieftants of Calcutta, are all men of wisdom and intelligence. From their keeping and protecting the traitor Hyna, all of these calamites arise. We send this letter by a Bengali whom we took at Ramú. 8th Jeth.

Extract from a despatch from Colonel Shapland, UB, Commanding the Chitiagong Frontier, dated the 21st May 1824

I have the honour to report, for the information of His Excellency the Commander in Chief, that the account received by Mr Robertson from Chuckeral mentions that the enemy had arrived at that place 'I am making every preparation for them in my power by strengthening the hills which have selected as a position for the troops. I have as yet received no report of the actual march of the wing of the 15th Native Infantry, though I trust it must be now on its way, as I repeated the urgency of my receiving every reinforcement which could be spared from Dacca.

- 2 I forgot to mention in my letter of yesterday that Ensign Campbell, of the 23rd, had arrived here slightly wounded, having escaped with a few of the men of his company. The enemy, by every account, in the affair at Ramu, gave no quarter whatever.
 - 3 It has not yet been ascertained how many of the Ramú detachment escaped, as some men belonging to it daily arrive. As soon as I can collect an accurate statement of them, I shall have the honour of forwarding it.

Shortly after the defeat of Captain Noton at Ramú, a smart action took place off Mangdú Creek, on the coast of Arakan, between the Hou'ble Company's cruiser Vestal, aided by two small gunboats, and a fleet of Burmese war boats. This is described in the following report by Lieutenant, Guy, the Commander of the Vestal:

Letter from Lieutenant J. W Guy, Commanding the East India Company's cruiser "Yestal," to Lieutenant Colonel Shapland, CB, dated Chittagong river, the 6th June 1824

I have the honour to report the arrival of the Honourable Company scruser Pok(al,n Chittagong river, having on board the undermentioned passengers nz, the subadar of the Chittagong Provincial Detachment the darogah the Magh jemadar and thirtyone of his sepoys, with a number of Mussulmen, who placed themselves under my protection.

On Thursday, the 3rd June, at 7 A. M, the subadar in charge of the stockade at Tch Naf came on beard, accompanied by one sepo, and informed me that the troops under his command had mutined the preceding evening by refusing to fire on the Burmese, who had surrounded the stockade with a force amounting to about one hundred and fifty horse with a numerous body of foot, that he had spiked the great gun and thrown its ammunition into the well, and would also have destroyed the magazine, containing twenty-one boxes of musket cartridges, had not the sepors threatened to kill him should he attempt fit; he then fied the fort, and excaped to the ship. On hearing this, I weighed anchor, and stood down the river. I shortly after raw about one hundred war boats drawn out in a line off Mangdu creek. On our nearer approach a canoe was depatched with five hands in her, ordering me to surrender the tessel or they would take her by force and kill every man on board. This message I answered with a lread side from my great gups. They key tup a smart fire for about ten minutes then retreated into Mangda creek. The two guidouts under Messas, Laughton and Boré chased them upon this and poured in swertl well directed showers of grape and canniter, which all great execution. They then returned, after having taken for its proposity from the abox ementioned canoe.

I then tacked and stood towards Shahpur, island under which several boats lay They endeavoured to escape but finding themselves cut off by the gunboats they ran their boats on shore and fled into the jungle but not before numbers were destroyed by the volleys of grape joured into them from the numbert The rest of the boats having escaped I stood for the new stocks le fired a breadside into it willst passing and then ran down and anchored off the south eastern point of Shahpuri island for the night. I should imagine about twelve or fourteen boats were destroyed as I observed them floating out of Mangdu creek after the attack, completely shattered by the great guns. I also beg leave to report the great zeal and activity evinced by the officers on board the vessel as also the high spirited conduct of Messrs Laughton and Boyé each commanding a gunboat. Finding the means of obtaining water and provisions thus cut off, and deeming my stay in the Naf to be of no further utility I weighed unchor the next morning at daylight for this place. where I now have the honour to report myself.

The defeat at Ramu created the greatest consternation throughout Bergyl It was expected that the enemy, flushed with trumph, would advance immodutely on Chittagong and Ducca, and Calcutta itself was not considered safe. Reinforcements were rapidly poured into Chittagong,—the 44th Foot from Calcutta, and the 30th Native Infantry*, from Dacca, and the 10th and 16th Regiments of Madras Native Infantry, which had been intended for the reinforcement of the army under Sir Archibald Campbell in Ava, were brought to the same place. The troops in Sylhet, under Colonel Innes, were also moved southwards, but were countermanded before they reached Chittagong. The Burnese however, made no attempt to improve their nictory, which was consequently barron of results, and before the end of July they had actually abandoned their position in British territory and retired into Anakan, whence, soon after, Maha Bandula and the best of the force under his command were recalled into Ava to oppose the advance of the British forces under the command of Sir Archibald Campbell, the proceedings of which will be related hereafter.

But backward as were the Burmese leaders in taking advantage of the success they had achieved, they were not more so than were the British in trying to recover the prestage they had lost. No attempt was made to avenge the defeat at Ramu: the defensive policy previously determined on was strictly adhered to, and soon the advent of the rainy season put an end to all operations.

As already related, the Burmese forces had withdrawn entirely from Kachar after the action at Dudhpath. The retirement of the British troops from that province, and their subsequent march to the south after the Ramu disaster, tempted the enemy to return, and by the beginning of June they had advanced from Manipur and re-occupied their former positions at Talain, Dudhpath and Jatrapur, with a force of about eight thousand men, which, it was given out, was only the advanced guard of an army intended for the invasion of the British provinces. He next proceeded to dislodge the enemy from Talain, but the attempt proved unsuccessful, and eventually the force, worn out by the fatigues of the service and by exposure during almost incessant rain, was compelled to fall buck to Jatrapur and thence to retire to Bhadrapur. Turther movements on this side were suspended until the conclusion of the rainy season; and in October the Burmese evacuated Talain and retreated into Manipur.

The particulars of these operations are given in detail in the following despatches:

Extract of a letter from Lieutenant Colonel 11" Innes, CB, Commanding the Sylhet Irontier, dated the 27th June 1821

His Excellency is already in possession of what has transpired on this frontier up to the 22nd instant and I now beg to state that owing to the rapidity of the current of the Barak river the banks of which are so overgrown with an impenetrable grass jungle, and, in many parts, under water, as to render tracking impossible, I have been obliged to warp up, and did not reach the mouth of the Gogra Nullah till the evening of the 25th instant

- 2 Having heard that from this nullah a passage across the sheels to the hill of Talain might possibly be effected, a movement which would have enabled me to turn the enemy's advanced position at that place, I resolved on making the attempt, but had not proceeded far before I discovered the chunnel to be too narrow to admit the presage of the large beats on which the ordnance is embarked, and I therefore returned into the Barak river this moraing, and am now in progress to Jatrapur
- 3 My operations after reaching that place will be guided entirely by circumstances, and of which no time shall be lost in making His Excellency fully acquainted
- 4 I deemed it advisable to take advantage of my proximity to the enemy, whilst on the Gogra Nullah, to reconnoutre their position, and accordingly detached Leutenant Fisher, of the Quartermaster General's Department, and Lieutenant Craigne staff to my detachment, for that purpose From the ropo to fitness officers as well as from my own observations I learnt that the hill of Talain is strongly stochaded, and that the enemy are there in considerable number

P S —It has rained with little intermission since we left Sylhet, and the country is consequently inundated

From Lieutenant-Colonel W. Innes, C B, Commanding the Sylhet Frontier, to Lieutenant-Colonel Nicol, Adjutant-General of the Army, Head-Quarters, dated on the river before Italain, the 6th July 1821.

In continuation of my despatch of yesterday, I have the honour to report that a battery was opened on the stockaded position of Talain this morning at 6 o'clock.

The shells from both howitzers and six-pounders were thrown with the greatest precision, but the round shot from the latter, I regret to say, had scarcely any effect on the strong palisades surrounding the work; the palisades in question being heavy trunks of trees I regret also to add that the carcasses when thrown from the howitzers went wide of the mark, and consequently the firing of the huts on the sides and summit of the hill which I expected his not been accomplished.

The guns are now posted on a rising ground about 600 yards to the south-west of the stockade, but I purpose to morrow carrying the four six-pounders to a small hill directly south of the enemy's position

From Lieutenant Colonel W. Innes, OB, Commanding the Sylhet Frontier, to Lieutenant-Colonel Nicol, Adjutant-General of the Army, Head-Quarters, dated before Tulain, the 7th July 1821.

In continuation of my last despatch, I have the honour, for the information of His Excellency the Commander-in-Cluef, to report that on the afternoon of yesterday, about five o'clock, the enemy made an attempt to turn the right of my position by occupying a high hill in the rear of a rising ground, where a working party was employed in clearing the jungle for the purpose of enabling me to place my guns in battery on it this morning. I directed the Rajah Gambhir Sing, whose local knowledge is excellent, with a body of his infantry, to take the enemy in rear, and at the same time three forward a strong detacliment to support the working party. After a short skirmish, the enemy were driven from their position, and I succeeded in retaining the spot I had fixed on for the guns. During the might a breast-work was thrown up, and this morning at drybreak the guns opened from it at the distance of 400 vards.

Three natives of Kachar, who this morning made their escapo from the enemy, state their loss from the effects of yesterday's shells to be very considerable, though they screen themselves in a measure from the severity of the fire by burrowing in the ground.

The only casualties consequent to the akirmish of yesterday were one man killed and three wounded of the Rajah Gambhir

Sing's infantry, and one recruit of the 16th (or Sylhet) Local Battalion* wounded

Although the artillery has been playing on the enemy's works with the greatest steadiness during the day, the fire has not had the desired effect and the enemy still continue in possession of the place. Many of them have been killed and many more wounded, but till further reinforcements join me to enable me to extend my operations, I am not sanguine in my hopes of carrying the position being well aware how much depends upon the success of the present campaign and how hurtful to the interests of the State any reverse or check would be at the present moment

The carcasses from which I expected so much I regret to say, have entirely failed and although many were thrown into the stock ade with great precision not one of them ignited. This is most probably attributable to the last five months of damp weather.

Lacutenant Colonel Bowen with the 14th Regiment Native Infantry, was at Jitrapur yesterday, and I have sent elephants for the conveyance of his detachment to this place, where I hope he will be to morrow, by coming over land he will save at least three days.

From Lieutenant Colonel W Innes, CB, Commanding the Sylhet Frontier, to Lieutenant Colonel Nicol, Adjutant General of the Army, Head Quarters, dated on the Barak, off Jatrapur, the 8th July 1821

Since I had the honour to address you yesterday, circumstances have transpired under which I have deemed it advisable to raise the siege of Talain ${}_{\star}$

I shall have the honour to report particulars tomorrow, in the meantime I beg to state that my principal reasons for returng were the exhausted state of my detachment and the howitzers be coming unserraceable

I immediately sent off a party to endeavour to get on the hills on their flank, but I regret to say this attempt failed, as it was discovered on approaching that the enemy had occupied the whole line of hills in immense numbers, and that there was no prospect of attacking them with any chance of success; the party was therefore recalled, and the battery being no longer tenable, it being so entirely commanded by the heights now in the occupation of the enemy, I was under the necessity of drawing off the guns. I have, however, to observe that this measure was determined on before, in consequence of the howitzers having become unserviceable and the exhausted state both of the artillery and infintry of my detachment, the former having been in the bitteries from the morning of the 6th till the 8th instant. I think it my duty to bring to the notice of His Excellency the very zealous exertions of this arm of the service, the practice was beyond praise, and the shot and shells were thrown with a precision which could not be surpassed, but the six-pounder shot were found to have no effect on the enemy's works, although the shells must have done considerable execution.

The carcasses, from being damp, did not, as I before reported, ignite, and consequently were useless.

I feel myself much indebted to Captain Smith for his great exertions during the three days the battery was open, and to Lieutenant Huthwaite, who, though labouring under a severe fever, rendered me the most essential service.

I regret to say that from the commanding position of the heights the guns were not withdrawn from the battery without some slight loss on our part, and which from the advantage possessed by the enemy might have been much greater had they not been kept in check by the steadiness of the troops in the battery under the command of Captain Cowslade, of the 30th Regiment, whose conduct was particularly conspicuous,

I deemed it advisable to re-embark my detachment yesterday, afternoon, and to fall back on Jatrapur, where I have taken up an eligible position on both sides of the Barak river, and within two miles of the enemy's works, where I shall remain till reinforced, and then act as circumstances may require.

It may perhaps occur to His Excellency that heights of such importance as those commanding the batterns ought not to have been entrusted to the protection of irregular troops, but I beg to observe it it the strength of my detachment did not admit of such an extended line of operations, and from the gallant manner in which Gambhir Sing's followers behaved the night before I had the fullest confidence in them I have been induced to fix upon Jatrapur for a halting place from the advantages it offers of an easy communication with Bhadrapur and the other parts of the Sylhet frontier

In conclusion I beg to bring to the notice of His Excellency the Commander in Chief the unfavourableness of the country for offensive and protracted operations at this season of the year and the total impracticability of dislodging the enemy from their very strong positions except by surrounding them and cutting off their supplies During the operations before Talain the officers and men of my detachment were exposed waist high in water and were completely exhausted from the severity of the duty and the excessive heat of the sun

It is matter of much regret to me that I left Bhadrapur before I was joined by a large reinforcement but at the time I did so Talain was reported merely a picket or post of observation and its occupation I considered of very great moment to the success of any operations which might hereafter be intended. Lieutenant Colonel Bowen with six companies of the 14th Regi ment Native Infantry joined me by marching over land from Jatrapur yesterday morning

Enclosed I have the honour to forward a return of the killed and wounded of the detachment under my command in the affair of yesterday

I have the hone ir for the information of His Excellency the Commander in Chief to report that intimation, having been received from some of the larkar is of the Intelligence Depart ment that the Burmese army in Aachar were retiring towards Manipur I directed a reconnaissance this morning to be made Accordingly a party under the command of Captain Hawes accompanied by Lieutenant Lisher of the Quartermaster Gene rals Department proceeded up the Barak river at daybreak attended by the flotilla to Jatrajur where a disembarkation was effected and the party marchel across to Talain which place was found evacuated and the works partly destroyed From tle intelligence collected from the natives of Kachar who had been captives with the Burmese it appears that the main body of the army which occupied a large cantonment at Dudl path of the arms, which designed angle candidate at Doubpart left in progress to Manipur early restorday morning and the rear guard vacuted Talain early last night. The same body is said to be now at Banskandi on the route to Manipur and distant from my present position four days march in the dry season but at present I regret to say the country remains so much under water that it would be impossible to march regular troops across consequently the enemy are now beyond pursuit

Extract from a letter from L entenant Colonel W Innes O B Command ing the Sylhet Front er to Lieutenant Colonel Aiscol Adjutant General of the Army dated on the river near Panchagan the 30th October 1824

I have the honour to report, for the information of His Excel lency the Commander in Chief that I proceeded up the Barak river on the morning of the 26th towards the posts lately occupied by the Burnese force at Talain and Dudhpath The first named place is occupied by a detachment of the 52nd Regiment under Captain Lister and I have instructed that officer to have under Captain the outward defences destroyed the palisades on the summit renewed and the hill itself rendered tenable by a small body of men The stockades on the heights to the south of Talain have been directed to be destroyed also

The Burmese position at Dudhpath consisted of seven stockades of a most formdable nature from their extent and the number of huts I should not imagine the strength of the enemy to have been less than ten thousand men. The whole of the stochades with the exception of a principal one elected round a pucka house, I have directed to be destroyed, in it I have posted Rajah Gambhir Sing with his levy, he having returned with a great proportion of his men, not being able to come up with any part of the enemy's rear guard

Kachar may now be esteemed entirely vacated by the enemy, for as far to the castward as Banskandi they are said to have passed six days ago in full retreat for Manipur

Expedition to Rangoon, and operations. In Ava to the end of August, 1821.

As has been already stated, amongst the measures resolved upon for the prosecution of the war forced upon the British Government was included the direction of an attack on the maritime provinces of Ava from the southward, which design also embraced an attempt on the Burman capital, to be undertaken by the line of the Irrawadi. In view to this being carried out effectually. a powerful force, drawn partly from Madras and partly from Bengal, and to the command of which Colonel Sir Archibald Campbell, K.c.B., of the 38th Foot. an officer of experience and ability, was nominated, was organized in April 1824, and Port Cornwallis, in the Andaman Islands, was named as the point at which the contingents from the two presidencies were to rendezvous preparatory to a descent on Rangoon. From this place it was anticipated (such was the ignorance of the features and climate of the country that then prevailed) that access to the capital of the Burman Empire would be a task of the most easy description. It was not long before this hope was dissipated.

Owing to the repugnance of the Bengal sepoys to travelling by sea, a repugnance possibly attributable not, as is generally supposed, solely to prejudices of caste, but to the still-remembered circumstance as well that many years before a portion of a Bengal native regiment had been lost at sea,* it became necessary to draw the greater a During the first war with Hyder AM, 1767 69, three Bengal battalions were despected on service to the Northern Curess on the termination of the war in 1769, these troops were test back to Bungal by sea, and it was on this occasion that the circumstance above referred to occurred, the vessel on which the fishsk companies of "Gowan's Battalion" (the late 6th havier Infantry) were embarked having navier again been heard of after learning port. "This unfortunate occurrence," gray Williams, in his History of the Bengal Native Infantry, "made a fatal impression on the minds of the native torong with regard to sea veryages." It is noticeable that prior to 1837 a very large proportion of the mutunes in the Bengal army wrose directly or induredly from attempts to that the serpos beyond sea signature that will.

roution of the native forces for this expedition from the Southern Presidency, the sepoys of which not only entertained no such prejudices, but had, in fact, on more than one occasion eagerly volunteered for service beyond sea. Thus it happened that on the principal theatre of the war the Bengal native army furnished only a very small portion of the force.

His arrival there, his progress up the river, the capture of Rangson, and the subsequent events at and in the neighbourhood of that place up to the end of the month of May 1824, will be found detailed in the following despatches:—

Commodore Grant anchored the $Iife_{J}$ immediately oppo sate the Kings wharf where we had observed a battery of appar ently from twelve to sixteen guns manned and ready to open its Still from motives of humanity the Commodore and myself were unwilling to commence so unequal a contest thinking the immense superiority on our side within full view of the shore would have induced the authorities in the town to make an offer of negotiating Their presumption and folly however led them a feeble all supported and worse to pursue a different course directed fire was opened upon us which the first few guns from the Laffey effectually silenced and then cleared the battery The Commodore consequently directed his fire to cease I had pre viously ordered the plan of attack and now gave directions for two brigades to be in readiness in their boats for landing -His Ma jesty s 38th Regiment, commanded by Major Evans above the town Major Sale with His Majesty's 13th Light Infantry at the centre, to make a lodgment in the main battery should he be unable to force the gate of the stockade, and a brigade of the Madras division below the town under the direction of Brigadier General Macbean -the 38th and this brigade being ordered to push round by the rear and enter the town should they find an opportunity of so doing

- 3. These measures in progress, the Burmese again returned to their battery and commenced firing, which was again silenced by a broadside from the Liffey, and the signal being made for the troops to land in the order already stated, which they did in the most regular and soldier-like style, in less than twenty minutes I had the satisfaction of seeing the British flag flying in the town, without the troops having had occasion to discharge a single musket, and without my having occasion to regret the loss of one individual, hilled or wounded, on our side, nor do I believe that of the enemy, from their rapid flight, could have been great. Of the latter, killed, only eight or ten were left behind.

The news of our arrival in the river having reached Rangoon the preceding night, and our rapid progress up in the morning being marked by an occasional shot, in answer to the fire from the chaukus, together with the preparations of the Burmese authorities for defence, threw the inhabitants into such a state of constitution as to cause a general flight in every direction towards the jungles; so much so, that out of a large population, I do not think one hundred men were found in the town on our taking nossession of it.

- O Although I am not yet enabled officially to communicate to you the subjection to the British arms of the islands of Cheduba and Negrais, together with Bassein yet I have not the least doubt, from the calculation of time and the fineness of the weather, that the attack in these quarters has been so simultaneously made as to render their fall about the same time with that of Rangoon almost certain

From Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K C B, to C Scinton, Log, Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c, &c, Erst William, dated Rongoon, the 1st J inc 1824

Herewith I have the honour of transmitting you a return of the ordnance captured at this place on the 11th ultimo, including ten small pieces brought from Negrais. The strength of the enomy in this arm, so far exceeding anything reported is now I conceive very much crippled, as in the different encounters we have since had nothing larger than simples or wall-pieces have been brought forward with them by the fire from the boats on which occasion Lieutenant Wilkinson expressed immself in terms of high admiration of the determined galluntry and coolness of the party of His Majesty's 41st Regiment They had three rank and file wounded

- 6 A work having been observed in preparation at Ke mendine only four miles distant from the shipping which if al lowed to be completed might prove a very scrious annoyance the Commodore and I determined upon destroying it for which purpose a sufficient number of boats were ordered from the fleet under the command of Lieutenant Wilkinson and I ordered the grenadier company of His Majestys 38th Regiment under Captain Birch to be embarked on board of them. The whole were in readiness and sailed a little before daylight on the morning of the 16th. Here with I beg leave to enclose Captain Birch's report of the result which leaves me to regret the loss of a valuable officer Lieutenant Kerr of His Majesty's 38th Regiment who with one rank and file was killed and nine rank and file wounded. On the part of the Navy that enterprising and active officer Lieutenant Wilkinson and five seamen were wounded.
 - 7 The spirited decision of Captain Birch and Licutenant Wilkinson and the gallant manner in which their orders were carried into effect by both officers and men ment every praise and must have left a strong impression upon the enemy of whit they have to expect should an opportunity offer of bringing them fairly into contact with the British arms.
 - 8 Lattle change has taken place in our prospect of supplies and resources from the country since I last addressed you I have succeeded in collecting some boats and every exertion is now making in securing whatever craft the rivers and creeks may con tain and organising supplies in depots of grain and other resources for the future operations of the expedition and I bog to assure you that no effort shall be wanting in carrying into effect the ultimate orders and instructions of the Supreme Government.

From Captain R Birch Use Majetty & 98th Regiment to Brigadier General Sir Arel ibald Cimpbell KOB Commanding the Forces Je Be dated Pangoon the 16th Maj 1824

I have the honour to inform you that in obedience to jour orders I this morning embarked with the grenadier company of

His Majesty's 38th Regiment under my command on board the boats of His Majesty's ship Lifty commanded by I seutenant Wilkinson of the Royal Navy having four row boats for the conveyance of the soldiurs for the purpose of dislodging the enemy from the village of Kemendino and adjacent villages

- 2 Agreeably to my instructions I lunded the troops at a small village about a mile from homendine where I observed a parts of the enemy had stockaded themselves and immediately attacked their position which I carried after exchanging a few rounds and killing ten or twelve of the enemy
- 3 I then endeavoured to penetrate the jungle towards the village of kemendane for the purpose of assaling it by the rear, while the beats attacked it in front but I regret to say that I found the jungles so unpervious as to prevent me from executing this part of my instructions. I therefore re-embarked my detachment and proceeded in the boats
- 4 On approaching a point higher up intending to land we found ourselves suidenly exposed to a heavy fire from a stockade till then unobserved and as any attempt to reture would have exposed the detachment to certain destruction and would have given encouragement to the enemy which I felt convinced you would have highly disapproved Lieutenant Wilkinson Royal Navy and myself resolved upon immediately landing and storming the stockade
- 5 We had many unforeseen difficulties to overcome the enemy having placed bamboos and spikes so as to make landing both difficult and dangerous
- 6 Nothing however could withstand the gallantry and determination of both soldiers and sailors who shortly established them selves within the stockade defended by about four hundred men who were quickly driven out at the point of the bayonet leaving sixty dead
- 7 The enemy were well armed a great proportion having murkets and a small field piece was taken in the stockade and I must do them the justice to say that they fought with very great spirit many of them receiving our charge with their spears
- 8 I ag in re-embarked my party and proceeded to the opposite side of the river where we drove the enemy from a third stockade which we destroyed in the same manner as we had done the two former
- 9 In concluding I regret to state that Lieutenant Thomas Kerr of His Majesty s 35th Regiment and one private were killed and nine privates wounded in taking the second stockade, and I have further to regret that Lieutenant Wilkinson of the Royal Navy was soverely wounded through the thigh with eight or nino of his crew, one of whom has had his arm subsequently amputated. I have much satisfaction in reporting the conduct of the officers and men under my command to have been steady and soldier like. I hope I may be allowed to express the highest admiration of the cool and intrepid conduct of Lieutenant Wilkinson Royal Navy, who although severely wounded, continued to render me the greatest assistance in giving directions from his boat, also of the officers and men under his command.

Acty Depy Adyt Gent

Since I last had the honour of addressing you the detach ment sent against Aegrais has returned to head quarters. The reports of the officers commanding relative to the operations against that part of the enemy's coast I bey herewith to enclose and under all the circumstances therein stated, I hope Major Artillery. Upon approaching the stockade taken on the preceding evening, we found it re-occupied, but only a few shots were fired from it, wounding one man of the 13th Regiment. About a mile further on we came upon two more stockades, admirably constructed upon well-chosen ground, not quite finished, and abandoned by the enemy, all of which were destroyed. Continuing to advance through a thickly-wooded country, we observed at every opening in the road parties of the retreating enemy beyond the reach of musketry. But some excellent practice with round shot and shrapnel was made by the artillery. After marching in this manner seven miles from camp, I found the artillery soldiers quite exhausted with fatigue, and was under the necessity of sending back the guns escorted by the Native infantry; having determined to advance with the four companies of Europeans as far as a large plain which my guide informed me was only a mile distant. At length the road did debouche from the jungle into an extensive valley of paddy-fields (already some miles under water), at the end of which stands the village of Juaz-hyoung, two miles distant, about which I immediately observed quantities of smoke, as if arising from a concourse of people cooking, and concluded that the long-desired obiect of releasing wretched inhabitants from the hands of their cruel tyrants was now within my reach. The rain fell in torrents, but I pushed on with my small party, confident of victory should the enemy meet us in the field, which I flattered myself was intended, from seeing the Generals drawing out a long line in rear of the village, flanked by impenetrable jungles. Our advance was by echellon of companies, left flank leading direct for the village of Juaz-hyoung, close to which a heavy fire was suddenly opened upon them from two stockades, so well masked as not to be distinguished from garden fences even at the short distance of sixty yards. Not a moment was to be lost. I ordered Brigadier-General Machean to keep the plain with the right company, out flanking the stockades and village, and keeping the enemy's line in check, while the other three companies, led by that gallant soldier, Major Evans, of the 38th Regiment, at the head of the two flank companies of his regiment, and Major Dennic, of the 13th Light Infantry, in like manner at the head of a company of his regiment, destined for the attack, on the order being given, rushed forward to the assault with an intrepidity and gallantry I have never seen surpassed, and in less than ten minutes the first stockade was carried and cleared of the enemy at the point of the bayonet, many escaping into the thick jungles in their rear The troops then, moving out, formed up for the attack of the second work with a coolness and regularity which only an eye-witness could sufficiently appreciate. The second stockade, resolutely and obstinately defended, was carried in the same gallant style. The garrison within, fighting man to man, was put to the bayonet. Many escaped into the jungle in their rear, but those who fled to the plains met a similar fate with their comrades within from the company under Brigadier-General Macbean, who allowed few to get away. He took no prisoners

- 4 The disadvantages under which the attack was made considered, the heavy fall of rain and the strength of the three companies commanded by Captains Piper and Birch of the 38th and Captain Macpherson of the 13th Regiment, not exceeding in number two hundred men, carrying by assault two formidable stockades defended by six or seven times thour force, and that in the face of what I have since ascertained to be the main body of the enemy in this part of the country, amounting to about seven thousand men. I need not, I trust, endeavour to speak in praise of the callant band I had that day the honour to command; indeed, I feel that nothing I might say could in adequate terms do them justice. Every man appeared to feel and act as if the honour of his country and the success of the enterprise depended upon his 'own personal conduct and exertions. The enemy left three hundred dead in the stockades and adjacent fields, and I hope the nature of the contest will not admit of our loss being thought great, although some valuable officers and men have been lost to the service, among whom I have to repret Lieutenant Alexander Howard, of the 13th Light Infantry, killed, and Lieutenants Michel and O'Halloran, of the 38th Regiment, very severely wounded, each having since lost a leg by amputation After carrying the stockades I drew up my small force and remained an hour in front of the Burmeso army, which even then, although late in the day and ten miles from camp, I would have immediately attacked, had I seen any prospect of bringing them to action, but a forward movement on our part at once satisfied me of their intention to retreat into the jungle had we approached them.
- 5. During the whole of this day, and on every other occasion since we landed, I received the most able assistance from Brigather-General Macbean. To him, my Adjutant-General, Lieutenant-Colonel Tuly, and the officers of my personal staff, my best thanks are due.
- 6 At daylight next morning I detached Brigadier-General Macbean with two regiments and some camel-howitzers to endeatour to fall in with the enemy on the same ground he had occupied the preceding day, but on arriving there, not a man was to be seen. Even some strong stockades were found evacuated and abandoned, and from the observations of the Brigadier-General and others, I have reason to behere the slaughter of the enemy on the day preceding must have been even greater than that already stated.

- 7. During the night of the 29th ultimo, a picket posted in front of the Great Dragon Pagoda was repeatedly fired upon from the jungle in their front, and from the noise of voices heard, it was concluded the enemy was there in some force. The light company of His Majesty's 38th Regiment was in consequence ordered to the front at daylight to reconnoitre, and at no great distance came upon 8 strong masked stockade, which, Captain Piper at their head, they charged and carried in their usual gallant style, the enemy leaving 21 men dead on the field. On our part, only five men were wounded.
 - 8. On the 20th ultime, I detached Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin, of the 41st Régiment, with a small force against Syriam. He found the place totally deserted and too insignificant and uninportant to deserve further notice. He returned here next day.
 - P. S.—Herewith I have the honour to enclose a return of the killed and wounded in the different affairs with the enemy since the 21st up to the 31st ultimo inclusive.

RANGOON,
The 1st June 1821.

(Signed) F. S. H. TIDY, Lieut Col.
Depy Adit. Geni.

In "this last despatch Sir Archibald Campbell mentions the return of the troops detached against the island of Negrais. The troops directed against Cheduba did not rejoin head-quarters at Rangoon until a later period, but the narrative of the operations of these detachments may properly be introduced in this splace. These operations are fully described in the subjoined reports from Brigadier M'Greagh and Major Wahab:—

From Brigadier General M. M'Creogh, to Brigadier General Sir Archibald Compbell, K.O.B., dated on board the Hon'ble Company's Ship "Ernaad," river Rangoon, the 11th June 1821

I have the honour to report that, in execution of the service you assigned me, I anchered off the eastern side of the island of Cheduba, with the transport Anna Robertson in company, on the night of the 12th of last month, and found the other transport and His Majesty's ship Stancy already there. I immediately conferred with Captain Mitchell, and on the 13th Lectienan Matthews of that ship made a bold and very intelligent reconnaissance up the small river on which the enemy's town is situated, and, in our cutre ignorance of localities, his report was of essential uses to me in arranging the disembarkation.

- 2 The ships lay three miles from shore, outside of a mud flat which stretched parallel with the land and is nearly dry at low water, and the coast on this side is covered with jungle to the edge; indeed, the mouth of the river is not distinguishable at a very little distance. We moved towards it on the morning of the 14th with as many men as the beats would hold (200 of His Majesty's 13th Light Infantry Regiment and 100 of the 20th Native Infantry *)
 - 3 On the southern side, a short distance up, was an outpost, which was immediately taken possession of by a small party from the leading boat, the Burmese returning from it without reastance. The river varies in breadth from about forty to a hundred yards, the jungle on both sides extending far into the water. About half a mile further up the ground is cleared and cultivated, and the enemy became visible, liming a trench of three hundred yards extent on the edge of the northern bank, with their right flanked by a bridge over the river.

^{*} The late 10th Bengal Native Infantry.

- 4. They permitted our boats to range along until the headmost arrived opposite their right, and then opened a fire of musketry and swivels, accompanied by flights of arrows. The bank was steep and somewhat difficult, but two or three parties of the 13th were soon on its summit in spite of the enemy's efforts, who opposed them with fougiderable boldness. A few minutes' firing followed while the remaining boats landed their men, and they fled, leaving upwards of twenty killed and many wounded.
 - 5. Their village or town commences near the spot at which we had landed, and I immediately moved up the street in pursuit. On arriving at the end of it (about a quarter of a mile) we found a stockade into which they had retired, and from which they opened a fire as soon as we appeared It was a square of about two hundred yards each face; the outward piles from twelve to twenty feet high, an emboakment and parapet within them, salient gateways in each face, and a triple row of railing round the entire exterior, appeared to be in good order, and the fire was from several sixpounders, as well as swivels of various calibres, and musketry.
 - 6. I immediately lodged parties at such points as afforded tolerable cover, ordered the howitzers and two or three ship guns ashore, together with the remainder of the sepoys, and meantime marked off a battery within a hundred yards of their front gateway.
 - 7. The weather now became exceedingly unfavourable, but as all gave their most hearty and zealous endeavours to the execution of what was pointed out to them, our want of proper materials, implements and workmen was surmounted.
 - 8. Repeated feints upon the enemy's left sufficed to turn his attention from our working parties on his right, and during the night of the 16th two nine-pounders and a carronade on ship carriages were placed in the battery, the hut that marked it pulled down, and it opened in the morning. Its fire was soon decisive on the gateway, which, having been their last thoroughfare, was not so strongly embanded as the others. Having prepared some seamen with axes and ropes to accompany the column, I ordered it forward. It moved rapidly to its point, headed by Major Thornbill's company of His Majesty's 13th, A few moments sufficed to complete the destruction of the wounded spars, and we were speedily in the stockade, followed by the reserve under Lieutenant-Colonel Hampton, of the 20th Native Infantry. The Burmese chief in command was killed near the point of attack. They abandoned their interior defences (a trench and breast-work), and fled through their rear gate, leaving a great number killed,

- 9 Considering that throughout these little operations our investment was very close, and the enemy a fire kept up without any interruption I am happy to say that our loss has been suggularly small.
- 10 When all expeed not only ready obedience, but the utmost real, it would be dificult to remark upon individual claims to notice, but my thanks are due to Lie utenant Colonel Hampton commanding the detachment of the 20th Native Infantry, and to Brevet Major Thornhill, of His Majesty a 18th, for the manner in which they and their officers and men fulfilled their dilutes. The latter officer was wounded by a speir while leading his men into the stockade. I am also much indebted to Lieutenant Mahim of the 13th, Brigade Major, for the active and valuable assistance he afforded me throughout
- 11 I must do myself the pleusure to acknowledge the cordnal co-operation that I received from Captain Mitchell of His Majesty's ship Slancy, who accompanied me at the disembarkation, and to whose readiness in affording me every assistance his ship could supply, the service was importantly indicited and the evertions of his seamen under the immediate command of Lieutenant Matthews in getting the guns landed and assisting in the battery, contributed essentially to accelerate the result.
- 12 On the 19th one of our reconnecting parties under Captain Aitken of His Majestys 13th succeeded in capturing the Rajah who was concealed with some of his followers in the jungles a few miles in the interior. It appears that of six hundred Burmese, who about a month previous to our attrek were sent over to assist in the defence of the island little more than three hundred surrived the contest unhurt and the Chedubans whom they had mustered to assist in the defence of the stockade have also suffered considerably. The surriving Burmese passed over to the main land.
- 13 Having made such arrangements regarding the island as circumstances admitted, I re-embarked the European part of uny force in conformity with your orders and sailed with the ships Ernaud and Anna Robertson on the 3rd of the present month leaving Lieutenant Colonel Hampton with his detachment of the 20th Native Infantry and His Majesty ship Staney in possession and on the most friendly understanding with the inhabitants. On the 6th we lost sight of the islands, on the 9th we made Negrais with the intention of visiting and reporting to you the situation of the detachment you had ordered there but the weather becoming so threatening as to render it unadvisable to risk the ships in such a situation I stood on for this place and reached off the bar of the river this day

14. I enclose returns of our killed and wounded, and am happy to add that most of the latter are doing very well.

Return of the killed and wounded of the force under the command of Brigadier M. M'Creagh, C.B., during the reduction of the island of Cheduba from the 14th to the 17th May of 1894, both days inclusive.

From Major J. Wahab, Commanding the 2nd Battalion 17th Madras Native Light Infantry, to Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B., dated on board the "Hermione," the 25th May 1824.

In conformity to the instructions I had the honour of receiving from you, the three ships thereby ordered separated from the fleet on the 5th instant, and on the evening of the 11th anchored off Pagoda Point, near Negrais.

- 2. On the morning of the 12th we again got under weigh and with some difficulty got into the river, and at noon anchored off the middle of the island. Towards 4r.M, beats were seen making from the northern part of the island towards the manhand. I desired Captain Goodridge to get the shaps under weigh namediately, and I got the troops on board the Hermione ready for landing so soon as it should come to an anchor, having proviously got the flat-bottomed boat launched for that purpose. Accordingly, about sunset I landed with a party of troops, and having gone over the northern extremity without seeing any one, I returned towards the point where I landed Two companies having landed by this time, I directed guards and sentries to be posted in various directions for its security, and returned to my ship.
- 3. On the following morning, at daylight, two parties (previously warfied for this duty), one under the command of Captain Ogilive, composed of the troops on board the Carron, was directed to explore and search the island from the southward, the other under Captain Tod, of four companies from the Hermione, to proceed along the foot of the bill until he met with Captain Ogilire.
- 4 The latter party, after six hours of indescribable labour through an almost impenentable jungle, and up to their middle in water, returned without being able to see or discover anything. The former, after searching the southern side of the island, came up by its custern side, and joined at sumset. The rest of the troops landed at its northern extremity with the same success and without discovering a single spring of fresh water or habita tion of any kind

- 5 From the above survey it is evident that the island of Negrais is perfectly barren and covered with an almost impenetrable jungle and deep inlets of salt water not producing any article of sustenance for troops. The only spot with any signs of cultivation is on the northern extremity of it where the jungle has been cleared away sufficiently to build a few fishermens buts.
 - 6 Under the erroumstances at became necessary to search for some place where supplies of provisions might be procured for the subsistence of the troops destined to Leep possession of the island With this view I crosed over to the munifund with a varte of troops and accompanied by two or three officers I'mro ceeded in search of some village. After sailing up nearly ten miles we came to a village whence on seeing us the inhibitants. becan to fly but as it was my desire to conciliate them as much as possible I made them understand by signs (not have g any one to interpret) that we would not molest them and directing the sepoys to keep at a little distance I proceeded to the village with the other officers The inhabitants after a little seemed pleased at our visit and those that had fled began to return with their families and goods and we made them understand by signs that we wished to have provisions for which we would pay in money They appeared satisfied and as well as we could understand said they would bring us provisions of all kinds
 - 7 Under an idea that these people would be induced to bring supplies of provisions to the troops destined to keep posses som of the island (without which they could not possibly remain long there as there was only a few weeks supply on board) I directed five companies to be disembarked with their baggage and directed the two ships that were to return with me to complete their water as quickly as possible
 - 8 The next evening people were seen collected at a point on the mainland opposite to the island about five fulles distant but thinking that they came out of curiosity I took no further notice of them than ordering a strict look out to be kept towards them
 - 9 The following days were occupied in completing the water of the two ships but on the morning of the 17th "observing the number collected on the opposite side to be very considerable and continually increasing and that they were accompanied by heats of a large description I considered that their intentions could be no longer deemed 1 caccable and as I discovered that a stockade had been thrown up, I ordered immediately three compinies, under Lieutenant Stedman, to embark in boats and cross over to the mainland, and three other companies under Captain Ogilvie, for their support, to embark on the return of the boats, there being only five capable of conveying troops, and that not above 250 men at a time Accordingly, they were embarked about noon, but the wind and current was so much against them, it being flood tide, that they were carried away four miles beyond the point I intended them to land at, and were brought close to where the stockade had been constructed. Fortunately the boats reached the same place at the same time Lieutenant Stedman having collected and found the men in order, he found there was no time to be lost in waiting for the party under Captain Ogilvie, and he determined to attack them immediately with the party that had already landed, and on his advance the enemy opened their guns upon him Lieutenant Stedman's letter, which I have the honour to enclose will explain the result and success of his attack

- 10 The steady conduct of the troops employed on this occasion, the celerity of their advince, and steadness of their fives seem to have shaken the courage of the enemy, and on the troops penetrating the stockade by an opening which fortunately had not been completed the enemy field in the utmost disorder leaving everything behind them the rout was most complete, they field in the utmost consternation in every direction. They must have suffered severely as they were collected in vast numbers to the amount of about eight hundred men within so small an enclosure
- 11 There were six found dead the following morning at a little distance from the stockede. Our loss considering the exposed situation of the men was small being one killed and five wounded. The jemadar died during the might
- 12 The troops took possession of ten or twelve guns, brass and iron of various calibres, mushets spears and dháos without number from forty to fifty boats some of a very large description with a quantity of gunpowder and balls &c
- 13 The guns have been taken on board the cruiser Mercury, and the other articles were completely destroyed
- 14 From this circumstance it becomes evident that the people are hostile to us on the mainland and as the island produces no supplies of provisions it became necessary to enquire what provisions could be supplied from the ships
- 15 On enquiry, I found there was only a few weeks supply of provisions for the men on board the Carron and none for the officers and the months allowance which was pard the commundor at Madras for the subsistence of the officers on board the ship expired on the 14th instant

- 2. As the day was too far advanced to expect any reinforcement under Captum Ogdva, and as our situation from not knowing the strength of the Durmans did not ensure success against them I determined to detain the boats that brought us in case it $m_{\rm o}$ ht be necessary to retreat to the ships at the same time ordering the companies all of whom landed nearly at the same period to follow the advanced grard at the distance of fifty paces
- 3 We had proceeded but a short space when I observed the guard in advance to halt and I received intimation that they were already close under a breastwork of the enemy surrounded with guns and which the thick jungle along the beach had prevented my observing or indeed any of the party in advance till very*close to it.
- 4 Delay however under any circumstances was to be avoid ed and as I had made up my mund to return their fire the instant they commenced it I pushed on desiring the advance to join their comprises and having loaded returned their first fire from cannon and small arins with a volley which was followed up by a charge and messant fire upon them from the rear companies for the space of ten minutes when the breastwork with guns complete was ours and all our attention was directed to the stockade itself in which at this period at least seven hundred men armed were observable
- 5 Providentially for us an opening to the right of the stock and from the breastwork had not been completed into which we continued to pour our fire with such success that the enemy were observed to decamp with the greatest precipitation leaving us their cannon indeed everything they were possessed of a last of which with a return of the billed and wounded is attached
- 6 I cannot conclude this report without expressing my on tire approbation of the conduct of all concerned on the occasion for to all I feel my best acknowledgments are due though were I to particularise the services of Lieutenants Lindesay Haig and Hutchings were such as to entitle them to praise more valuable than mine.
- 7 Our loss is so trifling when I consider the means the enemy had of annoying us that it can only be attributed to their fire being directed too high

I have the honour to report the arrival at this anchorage of the Hon ble Company's cruiser Mercusy under my command to await your further orders and to requant you in compliance with the instructions received from Commodor. Grant of His Majesty's Royal Navy I effected the purpose on the 12th of May for which I was directed to accompany Major Wanho of the 17th Madrus Native Infuntry to the island of Negrais on which a party was landed by Major Wahab and the British flag hoisted without opposition

- 2 On the 16th our attention was called to r collection of men and boats on the opposite side of the river. A party was sent accompanied by the Mercury which produced a letter from the Governor of Byssein.
- 8 On the 17th a stockade was perceived of some extent and strength. We weighed anchor in company with a party of troops, at 4 30 P w anchored off the stockade the party having previous ly landed from all the borts procurable At 5 P m the Burmahs opened an indifferent fire on the troops when I commenced at a long range shot and after firing a few rounds from our long guns the troops marched into the stockade without further opposition on which occasion I have to report the capture of twenty eight boats (all of which were destroyed) and fourteen pieces of small cannon
- 4 The island of Negrais is confined to about six miles in circumference extending north east and south west On the south west there is a plain of some extent covered with grass on which I saw a number of cattle and enclosure for a very small quantity of rice. The hills and other parts are quite woody. No run of water was discovered but confined to wells. They are capable of producing a great deal with a little attention.
 - 5 The entrance into Negrais harbour I consider difficult and only to be effected with great precaution the channel being exceedingly narrow It is quite secure from winds The river beyond that to Bassein 18 from my own observation and what I have since collected clear and safe from the reland to Bassein

THE ease with which their stockades had been captured, and the heavy loss inflicted on them in the several engagements which had taken place, did not cause the enemy to relax in their endeavours to carry out their plan of operations against the British troops at Rangoon, which was to surround and destroy them, or else compel them to surrender at discretion. They concentrated a large force at Kemendine, at which place, about two miles above the stockade from which they had been expelled on the 10th May, they constructed an extensive system of fortifications of the same nature, and were becoming generally so troublesome that Sir Archibald Campbell found it necessary to move against them without delay. Accordingly, on the 2nd June, a combined military and naval expedition proceeded up the river. On the following day, one stockade was captured, but the attack on the principal fortification proved a failure, one of the columns of attack sustaining considerable loss from the fire of our own armed vessels on the river.

No time was lost in trying to repair this failure, and on the 10th Junea force of about three thousand mention with eight guns, proceeded to repeat the attack, two divisions of armed vessels being employed at the same time to assail the river face of the stockade.

The attacking force was formed into three columns, organised as follows:—

The following despatches describe the operations of the 3rd and 10th June 1824 .—

Extract from a despatch from Brugadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, K C B, Commanding the Forces in Aia, to G Swinton, Eug, Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, dated Banaoon, the 4th June 1824

On the 2nd instant I received information that the enemy had assembled in great force, and were stockading themselves at Kemendine, intending to attack our lines, and that the messengers who had been sent in were, as I suspected spies. I therefore ordered two strong columns of reconnaissance from the Madras Division to move on the following morning upon two roads leading from the Great Dagon Pagoda to the village of Kemendine, the right column under the command of Lacutenant-Colonel Hodgson, the other under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Smith, proceeding myself up the Rangoon river with two of the Hon'ble Company's cruisers and three companies of the 41st Regiment for the purpose of observing the enemy's force, and making a diversion in favour of any attack which might be made by land. In the course of two hours we were abreast of the enemy's encampment The troops landed and burnt every hut to the ground brought away one war-boat and destroyed another, and carried off an 18pounder carronade, all without the least annoyance from the enemy, who either fied into the jungle, or retired into a very large stockade which I observed close by and from which some guns were fired, killing and wounding a few men.

- 2. In the course of the merming the two columns coming down from the first Dig or Pageds, met close to the stockade of Kemendine just alluded to and an effort was made to enter it, which I have no doubt would have succeeded but for the occurrance of some installes; and as the attack was never in any way persecred in I do not much right the risult as it will tend to hall our entity for into a security that may soon prove fital to him I am antitudy employed in a paring transport for the future progress of the exposition. We have already captured from fifty to said, large engry is its which are getting cut down and made more manageal it and are calculated on an average, to carry a complement of sixty men each.
 - 3 The second embarkation from Madras consisting of His Majesty's 89th Regument and two battalions of Native Infantry, has arrived in the river

 'Sophie," to Ciptain F Marryat, R N, dated the 3rd June 1821 *
- I beg leave to state to you for the information of Commodoro Charles Grant that during your absence of jesterday I received directions from Sir Archibald Campbell & Ch., Commander in Chief of the military forces employed against the Burmese, to order the flottlia and row boats to convex troors up the never
- 2 At 5 AM. the troops embriked accompanied by the Houble Company scruisers Mercury and Tletis three flotilla gun boats and the pinnaces of His Majesty's ships Larne and Sophie
- 3 In consequence of the draught of water of His Majesty's sloop under my command being too great for the upper part of this river, I did not consider it pridict to remove her. The boats of the said sloop and the Larne were consequently employed and made their rendexvous on board the Hon ble Company's cruzer Thetis At 7 a.M. the cruzers and flottlin anchored and commenced a heavy fire on a very strong stockade (Kemendine) when the troops were landed.
- 4 The pinnaces of His Majesty's ships Zarne and Sophie, in proceeding in advance carried a small stockade from which was brought an 18 pounder carried a small stockade from which was brought an 18 pounder carroinde. They were afterwards engaged under a most harassing fire of carronades and muslety from another-atockade and I am sorry to say suffered severally although infinitely less than could have been expected on such service.
- 5 The Commander of the Honble Companys cruser Thets being so crely wounded when I was on board I took command of her but Sir Archibald Campbell Ken having embarked on board the Honble Companys cruser Mercury all orders to the cruse rand flottlad proceeded from him

- 6. Where every man did his duty, it is difficult to bring into notice the conduct of individuals, yet I cannot avoid particularising the pre-eminent and gallant conduct of Mr. George Goldfinch, and I much regret the severe wound which he has received, as it will deprive me for a time of his valuable services. He has since our arrival here always been employed in the command of the boats belonging to His Majesty's sloop Sophie, and has always met my warmest approbation; indeed, I cannot speak too highly of this meritorious officer. He has passed his examination for a Lieutenant nine years and three months. I hope you will take the conduct of this deserving officer into your consideration, and recommend him to the favourable notice of Commodore Grant, and I trust it may be the means of procuring for him that promotion he so richly merits.
 - 7. I have every reason to be much satisfied with the cooperation of Lieutenant Fraser, who commanded the Larne's pinnace, and whose exemplary zeal and gallant conduct were conspicuous.
 - The zealous conduct of Mr Charles Scott, who has passed his examination for Lieutenant four years, reflected on him great credit.
 - At about 3 P.M., the enemy being in great force, the troops were re-embarked, the cruisers and flotilla then weighed and returned to their former anchorage.
 - From Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B., to G. Seinton, Esq. Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, & &c, &c, &c, Fort William, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 16th June 1824.

Since I last had the honour of addressing you, Brigadier-General M'Oreagh and the European part of the detachment sent against Cheduba have returned to head-quarters, having fully executed the orders given by me, agreeably to the instructions I had received from the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council The able and satisfactory manner in which Brigadier-General M'Oragh carried on the operations entrusted to him will appear by the enclosed report,* and the result has been such as might have been expected from the judicious arrangements of that experienced officer.

2. One or two messages of an ambiguous and unimportant nature had been received from the enemy's camp, but on the morning of the 9th instant, two of our former messangers came in and intimated that two men of rank, one of them formerly Governor of Bascin, were then in the boats, and desirous of holding a conference with me, if a passport and promise of safety were sent to them. Excepting they required was immediately granted, and in a short time the two chiefe each in his war boat rowed by fifts men arrived at the Shanburdar's house, and were introduced to Caltain Canning and myself. Their whole conduct and con terration was pempous and artful, with many professions of friendship and amicable intentions on the part of the Burme-e Government, but carefully avoiding every point which might lead to direct communication with the seat of Government, in a word, mean hypocress and low artifice marked their demeanour, and a wish to diceive and gain time. A translation of the only docu ment which after much hesitation, they produced is herewith en clo-ed. They were told in plain and pointed terms that these professions messages, and meetings undoubtedly could lead to nothing; that peace and war were not left to their decision, that if they per severed, as they had hitherto done, in preventing all communication with those who alone had the power of treating with us the consequences would assuredly fall on them and the r devoted country; that they could never succeed in Julling us into mactivity either by artifice or profession, and that the war should be vigor ously carned on in every corner of their Empire till the Court of Ava should think proper to redress our wrongs and withdraw their haughty pretentions to our territories. We were their informed that a Woonghee, one of the live Ministers of State, was at Donabyo about forty miles up the river, but if we would not treat with him without seeing his authority under the great seal of the Empire, a boat should be sent in five days to carry our letter to None has yet appeared.

3 Having completed my arrangements for striking a blow upon the enemy's force assembled there on the morning of the 10th instant, although the weather continued most unfavourable. I moved upon the enemy's fortified camp and stockades at Kemen dine with about three thousand men, four 18-pounders, four mortars. and some field pieces sending two divisions of vessels up the river to prevent the enemy from e-caping on that side. It was my in tention not to lose a man if it could be avoided. The enemy had already frequently experienced the irresistible influence of the British bayonet, and it was now my wish that they should also know we had still other and perhaps more dreadful means of exterminating them in every stockade they might be found in. The country season, and roads rendered the undertaking extremely ar duous, but not beyond the mexhaustable spirit of such soldiers as I command About two miles from town the head of the column was stopped by a stockade, apparently very strong and full of men I ordered two heavy guns and some field pieces to open upon it, whilst the troops surrounded it on three sides, but the jungle was so very thick and close as to prevent the possibility of altogether cutting off the garrison. In less than half an hour, a considerable gap was made in the outward defences of the work, and the defendants nowhere daring to shew themselves, I ordered a part of the Madras European Regiment, supported by a part of the 41st Regiment, to charge, and the work was immediately carried with a triling loss on our part, the enemy leaving one wounded and fifty men dead on the ground. Major Chambers, leading the support of the 41st Regiment, and one of the first men in the breach received a wound in the face from a spear, which I am happy to av is not dangerous. While this was going on under my own eye, a very spirited and successful attack was made upon the other side of the stockade by the advanced companies of the 13th and 38th Regiments, who, by assisting each other up the face of the stockade, at least ten feet high, entered about the same time as the party by the breach, putting to death every man who opposed their entrance, and it affords me pleasure to state that the first man who appeared on the top of the stockade was Maior Sale. of His Majesty's 13th Light Infantry

This point gained the column again moved forward nearly a mile where our left was posted, communicating with the flotilla on the river about half a mile under the great stockade and fortified camp the head of the column moving up to the right with great toil and labour through a thick and tenacious supple for the purpose of again reaching the river above the stockade and thus completely investing the enemy's great stronghold In this I was partly disappointed the enemy having thrown un other works above the stockade, which would have exposed my right to certain loss, and not being able to invest the whole of the extensive fortifications I was under the necessity of leaving about a hundred yards between our right and the river. unoccupied, but as the principal work appeared crowded with men animating each other with loud and boisterous cheering, I still hoped they would remain till the impression I intended had been made At 4 PM, my troops were in position in many places within a hundred yards of the place, but in all parts with a very thick jungle in front, which extended to the very foot of the stockade. The night was passed in creeting batteries and making preparations for opening the guns at daylight next morning Loud and incessant cheering continued within the work, and lasted till after daylight.

5 The moment we had sufficient light on the following morning, a heavy and well directed fire was opened from our bracking and mortar batteries and was kept up for nearly two hours, when a party advancing to observe the breach, found the centup, during the cunnonade had evacuant the place, earrying off their dead and wounded. The chain of posts which they occupied rendered light at all times casy and the threshess of the jungle necessarily presented our observing when it tool place

- 6 The stockade is one of great strength, and capable of being obstinately difinded. It was garrisoned by the most despirate crows of the enemy's war-boats and it ennot be doubted that the dreadful example of the day before, and the auful effects of our opening fire, alone could have induced men possessed (as the Burmese undoubtedly are) of great personal courage to give it up
- 7. The object I had in view has thus been fully accomplished, a general prate and terror of our arms at present proxals among the troops lately opposed to us, and from one or two reconsisting parties which have since been out. I find that every stockade in our neighbourhood has been evacuated, and I have reason to think the enemy has retired to some distance from our front.
- 8 I continue to receive every assistance and co-operation from Captain Marryst, R.N., and the ships employed under his command.

The stockade of Komendine, thus captured, being found convenient for the command of the river immediately above Rangoon, Sir Archibald Campbell determined on occupying it permanently, and a regiment of Madias Native Infantry and a small British detachment were accordingly posted in it. Subsequent events amply justified this step.

The enemy now withdrew for a time from the vicinity of Rangoon, and concentrated their forces at Donabyo, about fifty miles up the river. For some weeks nothing of importance occurred. Sir Archibald Campbell did not find himself in a position to advance, and in the mean time the rainy season set in, bringing malaria in its train, which, combined with the bad quality of the food supplied to the troops, produced so much sickness and mortality that by the end of the season the Bittish commander had scarcely three thousand men (Curopean and Native) fit to take the field.

About the end of June, the enemy began again to assemble in the neighbourhood of the British position. A new commander, the Thamba (or Thongba) Wungvi, had received instructions from the Court of Ava to annihilate the invaders or drive them into the sea, and began his operations by assembling andentrenching a powerful force on the river above Rangoon, and at Kamarút on the Lyn branch of the Irrawadi. A portion even advanced on Rangoon, as well as on Dalla, on the opposite bank of the Irrawadi, which was also occupied by a British detachment, and made some determined attacks, and though these were effectually repulsed, the enemy became so troublesome that Sir Archibald Campbell determined on assailing them and driving them to a more respectful distance. This was done with the most complete success on the 8th July, the enemy being driven from all his stockades with the loss of eight hundred men killed, their commander himself dying in the jungle of his wounds, This success was followed up by an expedition to Kaiklu. some twelve or fifteen miles from Rangoon, where some of the enemy had assembled, and by another early in August to Sniam, near the junction of the Pegu and Rangoon rivers, whence the enemy were summarily dislodged by a force under the command of Sir Archibald Campbell himself A few days later the Burmese were ejected, after a smart contest, from some stockades they occupied near Dalla; and for the rest of the month they kept at a distance, and no event of importance occurred.

The operations above referred to, as well as an attack made by the enemy on our post at the Great Pagoda on the 30th July are described in detail in the following documents.—

we have had several partial affairs with the enemy, except in one solitary instance invariably sought for on our part, and all ending in the same brilliant manner that has intherto marked the gallant and intrepid conduct of the troops under my command.

About the end of last month it was stated to me by a few Rangoon people who had escaped from the jungle, that the Burmese Chief had received positive orders from Court to make a general attack upon our line and drive us at once out of the country Every movement of the enemy plumly indicated that something was intended large bodies of troops were for two successive days seen crossing the river above Kemendine, from the Dallah to the Rangoon side and I felt more inclined to give credit to the report from being well aware that had any such order been received by the Burman General, certain disgrace or even decapitation would be the inevitable consequence of his disobeying it On the morning of the 1st instant every doubt on the subject was removed. Three columns of the enemy, estimated at one thousand men each were seen crossing the front of our position moving towards our right and the jungle in front of the Great Dagon Pagoda, and along the whole extent of our line to the left, was occupied by a large force but on this side from the nature of the ground it ws impossible to ascertain either the disposition or strength of the enemy. The columns moving on our right soon came in contract with the pickets of the 7th* and 22nd Regiments of Madras Native Infintry, which received the attack with the greatest steadiness none of them yielding one inch of ground. The enemy then penetrated in considerable force between two of our pickets, and took post on a hill about four hundred yards from our position, occupying an old nagoda and some houses in front, from which they commenced a feeble and harmless fire from some jinjals and swivels. I instantly repaired to the point of attack with a gun and a howitzer from the Bengal Artillery, and three companies of Native Infantry, viz., one company of the 7th and two of the 22nd Regiment, the whole under the command of Captain Jones of the latter corps. After a short but well directed fire from tho artillery, I ordered Captain Jones to advance with his three companies and drive the enemy from his post at the point of the bayonet, and I had the satisfaction of seeing my order carried into effect in the most cool and gallant style; the enemy flying in every direction towards their favourite haunt and only place of safety, the jungle. During the firing on our right, parties of the enemy felt the pickets along our line to the left, but never appeared in any force, and retired on the first fire from our advanced posts. Thus ended the mighty attack that was to have driven us into the sea,-defeated with the greatest ease by the three weak companies of sepoys, and two pieces of artillery; although such an enemy might be well appalled at the appearance of the whole British line under arms.

- 3. From some prisoners who were taken, I am informed that twelve thousand men were marched to the attack: the left columns were ordered to engage with vigour, and as soon as they had succeeded in penetrating our line, the attack was then to have become general. Such were the orders issued, but nothing more contemptible than the conduct of the enemy on that day was ever witnessed. They paid for their folly, leaving at least one hundred men dead on the field. We had not one man either killed or wounded.
 - 4. Before daylight on the following merning, some hundred men of the Dallah force entered the town of Dallah, firing in the direction of our post. Captain Isacke, of the 8th Madras Native Infantry,* commanding, pushed forward with a few men, and was, I regret to say, unfortunately shot, the Burmese mutilating his body with the most savage brutality during the few minutes it remained in their power.
 - 5. While the enemy abstained from converting their town to the purpose of annoying us, I also respected it and afforded it every protection, although uninhabited by one individual; but when they thought proper to make it a mighty scene of savage warfare, I rased it to the ground.

^{* 2}nd Battahon,-the present 12th Madras Native Infantry.

Numerous reinforcements daily joined the enemy sarmy in our front a thing much to be desired as tending to increase the districts and discontent already prevailing in their lines and having observed a disposition to recross part of their force to the Dallah side of the river I determined on the 8th instant to make as general an attack as the very woods and inundated state of the country would possibly admit of For that purpose I ferried the force to be employed into two columns of attack -one proceeding ly land under the command of that excellent and undefatigable officer Brigadier General Macbean for the purpose of surrounding the enemy on the land side, while I with the other, proceeded by water to attack their stockaded position along the barks of the river in front. To this post the enemy appeared to attach the greatest importance and the stockades were so constructed as to afford mutual support presenting difficulties at parently not to be overcome without a great sacrifice of lives I therefore resolved to try the effect of shelling and consulted with Cartain Marryat upon the employment of such armed vessels as he might select to breach in the event of our mortar practice not succeeding. The shells were thrown at too great distance to roduce the desired effect and the swampy state of the country would not admit of any advance. The armed vessels 21" the S ttellate transport (lately in His Majesty's service) the Honble Company's cruisers Teignmouth and Thetis commanded by Captain Hardy and Lieutenant Greer and the Penang Government yacht the Jesse Captun Poynton -the whole under the command of Licutenant Fraser of His Majesty's ship Larne-now took their stations according to a disposition made by Captain Marryat and openel a fire which soon silenced that of fourteen pieces of artillery swivels and musketry from the stockades and in one hour the preconcerted signal of breach practicable was displayed at the main mast head The troops as previously arranged entered their boats on the signal being made consisting of details of the 3rd 10th and 17th Native Infantry commanded by Major Wahab of the latter corps ordered to lead the attach and supported by Lieutenant Colonel Godwin with 260 men of His Majesty's 41st Regiment and one company from the Honble Company's Madras European Regiment The assault was mide in the best order and the handsomest style Major Wahab with the Native Infantry landed and immediately attacked the breach while Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin almost at the same instant pushed ashore a little higher up and entered the work by escalade the enemy kept up a sharp but ill directed fire while the troops were landing but as usual fled on our making a lodgment in the place I now ordered Colonel Godwin to re embark with the detachment of the 41st Regiment and attack the second stockade which was immediately carried in the same style The third stockade was evacuated by the enemy

- 7 The cool and gallant conduct of both European and Native troops on this occasion was to me a most gratifying sight. To the officers of the breaching vessels every prizes is due, and I much regret that severe indisposition prevented Cuptain Marryat from being present to witness the result of his arrangements.
- 8 The mundated state of the country did not admit of any communication with Brigadier General Macbean from the shipping nor did I know the result of the operations of his column until I returned to Rangoon in the evening Nothing could be more brilliant and successful. He took by assault seven strong stockades in the most rapid succession throwing the enemy into the utmost consternation, and he had also the good fortune to fall in with a large body flying from a stockade attacked by the shipping of whom a great number were killed. The Brigadier General saviers me the ardour of his column was irresistible and speaks highly of the able and he received from Brigadier General M Creagh. He also reports most favourably upon the judicious and M Creagh. It also reports most favourably upon the judicious and Sallant style in which Majors Sole and Frith of His Majesty s 13th and 35th Reguments led the troops under their respective 12 I cunnot conclude without again adverting to the high feeling which animates overy corps and every soldier under my command. Their patience in frequently undergoing the greatest fatigue marching over a country almost wholly under water, ments overy praise and their intrepidity and valour whenever the enemy can be found cannot be sufficiently extelled.

Return of killed, wounded and missing of the troops under the command of Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell KCB, during the operations at Rangoon and in the excinity from the 18th June to the 12th July 1824

From Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K. C. B., to George Swinton, Esq., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c., &c., &c., Fort William, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 22nd July 1824.

I am now enabled to inform you, from information received from deserters and through other sources which can be relied upon, that the loss of the enemy in the action of the 8th was much more severe, and its consequences much more fatal and disastrous, than I could at the time have formed any idea of. The number of killed very much exceeds that stated in my despatch of the 11th instant, and great numbers have since died of their wounds in the jungle. All accounts agree, and I have no longer a doubt of the fact, that Thamba Woonghee (Third Minister of the Empire), a woondok, and two other chiefs of the first class were among the slain, and the troops, deprived of their leaders, have either dispersed or fled in confusion to the rear, there to await the arrival of the Prince of Tharrawaddy, said to be advancing with seventy thousand men.

2. The only body of the enemy I could hear of in this neighbourhood was a small force of three thousand men assembled at a place called Kaiklá, about twelve or fifteen miles from Rangoon, and measures were adopted for immediately attacking them, On the morning of the 19th instant, I ordered twelve hundred men to proceed by land direct to the spot, proceeding myself with six hundred more up the Pazandoung creek, running in its whole course nearly parallel to, and at no great distance from, the road approach have placed unlimited confidence in us. At all the villance the greater part of the inhabitants fled from their houses to the fields where they remained as spectators but at each we found a few men left to converse with us and recure every assurance I could give them of safety and protection if they remained quetly at their homes. On our return yesterday to quarters I had the satisfiction of seeing some of these villages thickly inhabited the peor le quite at their ease and saluting us as we passed

1 Although this little expedition upon which I was out for three days has terminated differently from what I intended I feel confident much good will result from it. The favourable imi ression male shall be cultivated to the very utmost of my power and happy indeed will I be to sheath the sword as often as the object in view can be attained by kindness and mercy

Extract from the Government Gazette, date I 80th September 1821 .

It is said that in the Burmese army there is a corps of about three thousand men specially denominated Warners. Of these again some hundreds assume the title of Invulnerables" both one and the other enjoying immunities unknown to other subjects particularly the latter class who in general remain about the per son of the King

Lately a large body from this redoubted legion made a vow that if His Majesty would send or allow them to go to Rangoon they would retrieve the national honour by the immediate expulson of the British Army Leave was granted and the In vulnerables headed by the Attawoon of the Prince of Tharrawad dy proposed in the first instance to carry by assault the Great Pagoda.

Accordingly one of their party was sent to reconnectre and fix upon the best point of attack. The sight of our guns and troops upon the works to use his own words so struck him with awe and terror that he was at once satisfied he would be much better made than outside of our lines" He accordingly come in as a deserter and communicated their plans adding that any one of four nights of the moon's age which he specified was de clared by their astrologers to be favourable for the attempt On the evening of the 29th July a small force in the jungles was looking out for them but they could not see a man. Invisible as well as invulnerable they succeeded after dark in creeping unobserved to the edge of the jungle, and, during the darkest part of the night, rushed with great celerity along the road leading to the north gate of the pagoda, firing and shouting in their usual style. An officer's picket of His Majesty's 38th Regiment was instantly under arms, and received them at the bottom of the stairs leading up to the place with a couple of volleys. A twelve-pounder of the Madras Artillery, mounted only a few hours before, opening upon them with grape at the same moment, they found it prudent to retrace their steps with all possible expedition. It has been learnt from a wounded man, who has since fallen into our hands in an attack upon a picquet, that twenty of these first class warriors were killed in this attempt.

[•] It is extract a here introduced as no offic al despatch can be traced desc bing the attack of he 30th July 1824 in the Great Lagoda though in a despat h of the 30 h September Sir Arch hald Campbell Gande allus on to t

[†] It was on the n ol t of the 30th July that the attack took place

From Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K. C. B., &c., &c., to George Sixuston, Eng., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c., &c., &c., Fort William, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 5th August 1821.

Being informed that the Governor of Syriam had assembled a force on the banks of the Pegu or Syriam river, and had ordered the whole conscription of the district to renair without delay to the place of rendezvous, for the purpose of finishing and defending a large field work which was to command the river and protect the surrounding country, although aware that few had obeyed the summons, I determined upon dislodging the enemy. and for that purpose I vesterday morning proceeded up the Syriam river with three hundred European and an equal number of Native infantry, the whole under the command of Brigadier Smelt, Upon approaching the landing place leading to the town and pagoda of Syriam, I observed the old Portuguese fort flong concealed from view by trees and overgrown brushwood) cleared and scarped where the old wall had fallen down and from fifteen to twenty feet high. Upon this the enemy had raised a parapet, and suspended huge logs of wood on the outside, intended to be cut away during the assault, and to carry the assailants before them in their descent.

2. The troops landed under the fire of the Penang Government brig Jessie and the Panerful sloop employed as a mortar vessel, and the advanced party moved on until stopped by a deep, impussable nullah, the bridge over which had been destroyed, and threatened to check our progress, but the difficulty was speedily removed, and a very tolerable bridge constructed by Captain Marrjat and part of the officers and crew of His Majesty's ship Lurne. The enemy's fire from musketry and artillery was even unusually feeble and contemptible, and they abandoned the place with the utmost precipitation when the troops moved forward to the attack leaving behind them eight pieces of good artillery

- 3 I next directed Lieutemant-Colonel Kelly of the Madras European Regiment, to proceed with part of the force to the Synam Pagoda which I was informed was also occupied by about three hundred men. The Lieutenant Colonel on arriving at the pagoda found the enemy inclined to dispute the possession of their almost impregnable post, but they lost confidence while the troops were ascending the long flight of steps leading up to the pagoda, and fled in the utmost confusion leaving four pieces of untillery and a great quantity of powder.
- 4 Although in these affairs the enemy afforded little opportunity for displaying the discipline and gallantry of the troops their usual feding and order were by no means less conspicuous and I had every reason to be satisfied with the arrangements of Brigadier Smelt and Lieutenant Colonel Kelly in conducting the different attacks.
- 5 From Captain Marryat and the officers of His Majesty's Navy I ever receive the most prompt and cordial co operation.

Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell having on the 4th instant ordered a detachment of six hundred men under the command of Colonel Smelt to attack the enemy who had stock aded themselves in the old fort of Syrnam I have the honor it to inform you that I wet is, with two boats from His Minyetys ship Larne to superintend the disembarkation and reider every assistance in my power.

The enemy having broken down a bridge across a nullah not fordable. I ordered the seamen to advance and repair it that the troops might be enabled to press which service they performed in a highly creditable manner exposed to a gilling fire of musketry and guns from the stockade.

This service being effected the advance was sounded and the stockade taken in good style by the combined force

From Brigadier General Sir Arclibald Campbell KCB he he, to George Sunton, Lig. Secretary to Governm at Socret and Political Department he he he, he he to trilliam dated Hoad Quarters Ringson the 11th August 1821

I rus informed some days since that the province of Dalla was in a very disturbed and unsettled state owing to orders Laving been received for a general levy of every man capable of in getting through the mud, which was remarkably stiff and thighdeep the scaling ladders were placed, and the stockade stormed and immediately carried. Some of the troops were again embarked crossed the river, and took possession of the opposite

- 2 Our loss (a return of which I do myself the honour to enclose) although severe is not so great as might have been expected from the nature of the ground we had to go over, and the sharp and severe fire kept up by the enemy until the scaling ladders were placed. The loss on the side of the enemy was but small (bett een twenty and thurty) in consequence of the vicinity of the jungle, into which they escaped the moment our men entered their works.
- 3 Of the conduct of the troops I cannot speak in too high praise, although it will be impossible for me to particularize the officers who so gallan'ly led their men to the assault as they are too numerous, many of them having assisted in earrying the ludders to the walls.
 - 4 I felt myself inghly indebted to Licutinant Γraser and a party of seamen and marines of His Majesty's ship Larne, whose unremitting exertions throughout the affair greatly contributed towards the success of the day
 - 5 It is with regret I have to report that Mr Maw (Royal Naty His Mylesty's ship Life,) your acting Aide-de Camp was severely wounded in the early part of the day, while he and Cup tain John Campbell His Majesty's 38th Regiment your Aide de Camp who was a volunteer on the occasion were chicking on firing was so heavy and so continued, that (at the request of Sir Archibald Campbell) I took up a reinforcement of two hundred men of the 41st Regiment under the command of Major Chambers but the stockade was in our possession and all firing had ceased previous to my arrival

The gallauty of the officers who were employed in this expedition viz Mr Thomas Fraser Second Liquitenant Mr Robert Atherton Purser and Messrs Duffell Winsor, and Norcock and

shipmen deserves the highest encomiums

I am sorry that our list of wounded is so heavy but it will be accounted for when I state that in all these attacks the laccars who man the other boats will not pull into the fire unless they are led by the officers and seamen of His Majesty's ship Larne

The conduct of Mr Max, midshipman of the Lifey has during the whole period of his service here been a series of gallantry. I have great pleasure in transmitting a letter from Sir Archibald Campbell relative to his conduct and adding my testimony to that of the Commander in Chief.

From Lieutenant T Frazer, to Captain Marryat His Mojesty's
Ship Larne date! Rangoon the 9th August 1924

I have the honour to inform you that, according to your directions I proceeded with a party of scamen and mirines in company with a detachment of the Madnis Europeans under the command of Colouel Kelly to reconnoitro a stockad, and village reported to be situated about eighteen miles up the Dalla creek

We had not rowed above two miles up the creek before we fell in with two strong stockads in a ten narrow put of the river. The bouts of His Majesty's ship Letrne having waited a few minutes to allow the other boats and the lunch with the scaling ladders to close the advance was sounded and the attrek was made under a heavy fire of guns and muskety from the Burmese. The scaling ladd is being placed the stockade was stormed under every disadvantage with great gallantry, the enemy running out in every direction into the jumple.

During the storming of the principal stockade the Bombay Artillery in the row boats kept up a fire on the other and succeeded in driving the Burmese out, and the second stockade was taken possession of without loss.

REDUCTION OF TENASSERIM, MARTABAN, AND YER.

Nor being, as before stated, in a position to advance from Rangoon, and the enemy, after their defeats in July and August, having temporarily ceased to malest the British troops, Sir Archibald Campbell took advantage of the opportunity to employ a part of his troops in the reduction of the Tenasseram district, a narrow strip of territory, some four laundred miles long, on the eastern shore of the Bay of Bengal, which the successor of Alompra had wrested from Siam some fifty years before the outbreak of our war with Ava.

Accordingly, about the end of August 1824, a force feonsisting of the 80th Poot, the 7th Madras Native Infantry, and a detachment of the Bombay Artillery) under the command of Lieutenaut-Colonel Miles, CB. 89th Toot, was detached from Rangoon for that purpose. Sailing from the mouth of the Lrawadi on the 26th August, the expedition arrived off that of the Tavoy river on the 1st September, and on the 8th Taroy fell into our hands without resistance. The expedition next proceeded to Mergui, which, after a sharp resistance. was captured on the 6th October. The capture of these two places involved the reduction of the whole province, which submitted without further opposition, After leaving a small force to hold Tavoy and Mergui. Colonel Miles with the rest of his command returned to Rangoon in November,

Similarly, in October, Sir Aschibald Campbell dotached an expedition against Maitaban. The command was entrusted to Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin, 11st Foot, the force consisting of a part of that regiment, the 3rd Madras Native Light Infantry, and a detachment of Madras Artillery, with H. M. S. Arachne* and Sophe as convoy. Maitaban was taken after some resistance on the 30th October, and the capture of the place was followed by the submission of the whole of the districts of Martaban and Neh

^{*} This ship, commanded by Captain II D Chads arrived from England after the outbreak of the war, and was sent at once to Rangoon

Colonel Miles' and Colonel Godwin's despatches describing then respective operations are subjoined —

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, KCB, to Lier tenant Colonel Arcol Adjutant General of the Army dc, dc dc dated Head Quarters Rangoon the 23rd October 1824

Herewith I have the honour to trunsmit you to be laid before His Excellency the Commander in Chief a copy of different re ports returns &c that I have this day forwarded to the address of the Chief Secretary to Government in the Secret and Political Department relative to the full of the enemy's scaport towns of Tavoy and Mergui to the force I detached under the command of Lieutenate-Colonel Miles of me by my Brigade-Major, Captain P. Young, of His Mnjesty's 89th Regiment, and the Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Captain Spicer, of the 12th Regiment, Madras Native Infantry, in carrying my wishes and orders into execution, and whose incessant labour and fatigue, after landing and in making the necessary arrangements for the future objects of the expedition, called forth my warmest acknowledgments; and I beg most earnestly to recommend those, officers to your protection.

From the best information I have been able to collect, the enemy had three thousand five hundred men in arms. On our gaining possession, they all fled, but in the course of the night and the following morning great numbers came in, and are now following their several avocations. About one hundred men belonging to Tenasserim I have detained in confinement, and as that place has lost all its former consequence and is at present nothing beyond a fishing village, this body forms half its force.

- A return of killed, wounded, and missing, as also of the ordnance, ammunition, and stores, are herewith transmitted.
- 7. The whole of this affair has proved so decisive, and the gallant and exemplary conduct of every individual so prominent, that I feel at a loss how to bring individual instances of inerit forward. I however have much pleasure in recording the names of Leutenant-Colonel Commandant MTDovall, of the 7th Regiment, Madras Native Infantry; Major Basden, commanding His Majesty's 89th Regiment; Cuptain Russell, commanding the deachment of Bomboy Artillery serving on board the Hon'ble Company's cruise? Thetis; and Lieutenant Cotton, of the Engineers, to the whole of whom I feel most obliged. The attention of Mr. Staff-Surgeon Smart was unremitting in his department.
 - 8. To my own staff, Captam Young, of His Majesty's 89th Regiment, Brigade-Major, and Captain Spuer, of the 12th Regiment, Madras Native Infantry, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, I am much indebted for their assistance and the promptitude with which they performed and executed every wish of mine, not on this occasion alone, but in all situations in which they have been employed under my command, and I beg leave to recommend them in the strongest manner to your favourable notice and protection.
 - 0. There being many points which it is necessary to communicate to you, I have felt the necessary of sending my Brigade-Major. Captain Young, with this despatch, who, possessing my full confidence, will develop to you personally every transaction that has occurred and the view I have taken of the state of these conquests.

Extract of a letter from Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K C.B., to George Swindon, Egg. Chief Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, Calcutta, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 7th November 1324

By this opportunity, I have the honour to transmit you be the control of the fall of Martaban, which will be read with interest, as evincing another proof of the impression our arms have made on the minds of the enemy. It will scarcely be credited that upwards of four thousand men, well armed, and well propared for the attack, from the unforeseen impediments the expedition met with in reaching its destination, pediments the expedition met with in reaching its destination, and fighting behind defences of a very formidable nature, should be driven out of them by a mere handful of Brutish troops On this occasion, you will be pleased to see the handsome manner in which Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin speaks of the 3rd Madras Native Infantry, one of the corps which retired from the stockade at Kailli.*

Despatch from Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.O.B., to George Swinton, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c, &c, &c, Catcutta, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 7th November 1821.

Head-Quarters, rangoers, act to For the last fortnight I remained under a very considerable force of uneasiness at not hearing of, or from, the expedition I had sent against Martaban on the 11th ultimo, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin, of His Majesty's 41st Regiment, apprehensive that the strong currents that prevail on this coast on the change of the monsoons might have driven then either past the port or out to sea, and the consequent deprivation of provisions and water jout the arrival at head-quarters last night of my Aide-de-Camp, who accompanied Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin as a volunteer, dispelled all apprehensions, and now enables me to transmit you, for the information of the Right Horble the Governor-General in Council, the detail of an achievement no less honourable than beneficial to the British arms, reflecting the highest credit on the able, judicious, and gallant officers who led, as well as every individual composing the force under his command.

Despatch from Lieutenant-Colonel H. T. Godwin, to Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.CB, dated Martaban, the 2nd November 1824.

The force you did me the honour to place under my command for the capture of the town of Martaban and its dependences, cleared the Rangoon river on the morning of the 14th ultimo, but owing to the ignorance of the people acting as pilots, with calms and contrary currents, the expedition did not reach Martaban till the morning of the 20th.

2. It was my intention to have landed on my arrival at Martaban, but the tides which run rapidly here rendered it almost impracticable, and the ships having it in their power to get nearer the defences in the evening, I deferred landing till the next morning at daybreak. I took two opportunities this day to see the whole front of the place with Captain Waterman, Assistant Quartermaster-General, and Captain Kennan, commanding the Artillery. Its appearance was uncommonly strong and commanding, and differed from anything we have seen about here. The place rests at the bottom of a very high hill, washed by a beautiful and extensive sheet of water. on its right a rocky mound, on which was

Madras Artillery commanding assisted by Lieutenant McGregor of the Bengal Artillery in the bomb vessel must have done great execution amongst the defenders of the works whose repeated cheers informed us their numbers were great

- 5 I had made up my mind to storm by escalade immediately under and to the loft of the rocky battery on the enemys right and when in to storm the battery itself and then the business could be but easy as we should take all the works in flank
- At five a clock on the morning of the 30th the men com posing the first division were in their boats -ninety eight men of His Majesty's 41st Regiment seventy five of the 3rd Native Light Infantry eight of the Bengal Artillery and thirty eight scamen of the Royal Navy about two hundred and twenty men and I was fully aware that these men would have the business to themselves as I had nowhere to want for the remainder of the force and every boat was already occupied. The advance sounded a little after five and the boats rowed off and soon came under a very heavy fire of all arms On approaching the shore I serceived there had been a misunderstanding with respect to the snot at which I wished to land and we had got on the wrong side of the nullah As we could not carry the ladders through the mud I ordered the boats to push off and put in at the place I appointed. At this time a heavy fire of artillery and musketry was on us and the lascars would not face it. Licutenant Keele of the Arachne commanding the naval force with me pushed on shore and gallantly went to see if the nullah could be passed he came back almost directly and informed me there was a boat on the nullah over which the men could go and the side of the rock to the battery appeared practicable. Trusting to the gal lantry of the people with me I determined to try it and from the men retting on shore there was not a halt till ve had possession of it. It was stormed under a heavy fire of musketry and the rock not high but to appearance impracticable and in the opinion of the enemy it was so

- by it. On entering the pagoda, I was surprised not to find it full, but on looking over the wall they were in hundreds, rushing down, taking the water, and crossing to the jungle. There were about a hundred and twenty muskets bearing on them, and their loss was very severe.
 - 8 All opposition was now at an end and on marching through the town it was as usual deserted except by a great many women. The Woonghee had six elephants ready, and had escaped with, as I am told a good deal of property. The emptiness of the houses showed every preparation had been made if the place was captured, to prevent our getting any property. I enclose you a return of the guns taken as also of the ordnance stores and the quantities of the latter immense, kept in a stock de about half a mile up the hill, and a regular manufactory to make the powder I had it blown up yesterday.
 - 9 Our loss has been comparatively small,—seven hilled and fourteen wounded. Captain Booth is not badly wounded. In this immense place with such facilities to escape, I cannot guess what the enemy is loss may have been, but from the prisoners of whom we have a great many and other sources it must have been great, as allowing that two-thirds of the numbers reported within this place at the attack, there must have been between three and four thousand.

Petract from a letter of Captain Clade of His Mayedys Sloop' Arachie' to Captain Coe dated Rangoon the 7th November 18-3

In compliance with your orders of the 12th instant I pro ceeded down the river with the force you placed under my com mund but from calms and currents did not enter Martaban river with all the flottla till the 20th

In passing up the river the boats crews with a few men of the 41st succeeded in destroying about thirty of the enemy's war boats some of them pulling at least fifty oars armed with swivels mushets and spears On our closing the town the ship grounded too for off to make use of her carronades with good effect. The enemy now opened their fire from the stockade which was returned by all the row boats forming a line close along shore till after sun set The mortar vessel lil ewise took her position under Captain Kennan of the artillery and opened a well directed fire the whole of the night, killing from report great numbers of the enemy By daylight on the 30th the troops were in the boats and the advance being sounded we pushed for the shore, with the loss of seven killed and fourteen wounded the battery was stormed and carried the enemy flying in all directions leaving great num bers of dead and wounded I here found the late Hon ble Com pany's schooper Placton * with twelve of her crew in irons, her commander was taken off to Ava

The Stamese, it may be mentioned, had nover altogether given up the hope of recovering Tenasserin from Ava, and for a long series of years had been accustomed to make predatory incursions along the coasts of that province Early in 1825, a flotilla of Stamess bonts arrived on the coast, and, as usual, begin plundering and burning, and seizing the inhabitants to carry off as slaves. Major Frith, communding at Mergai, immediately took measures to drive them off, and some skinnishes took place during Tebruary and March, in the last of which the enemy suffered so severely that they never again ventured to repeat these inroads

These occurrences are related in the following reports from Major Pitth —

Letter from Mayor W Frith, Commanding at Mergui, to Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell K O B &c. &c., &c Commander of the Forces at Rangoon, dated Mergui, the 7th February 1825

On the 29th ultime information having been brought me that a Siamese fletilla had made its appearance within a short distance of this town committing several acts of depredation on the villages, I despatched Lieutenant Drover with fifty schoys, in country beats in search of them

He found them as described about eight hours row from this amounting to near thirty sail of large boats well armed pulling from sixty to eighty oars each He made towards them under English colours and on hoisting a white flag it was immediately answered. A conference ensued in which the Siamese, chief regretted that his ignorance of our conquests in this quarter had led him into acts of aggression on a country now under British protection and promised to come the following day to Merrum and release all the prisoners he had taken

On the following day he made his appearance with only nino boats, the rest he stated would be here on the morrow when all the prisoners he had taken should be released and again renewed his protestations of respecting our conquests in this quarter at the same time requesting of me a paper for the King explanatory of the causes of his sudden return without accomplishing his orders respecting the intended hostilities in this quarter. This I promised to give him on the release of all the prisoners he had taken in this neighbourhood.

He remained here till the 2nd, when three boats came in and he relevaed miety prisoners. But being informed that we were dissatisfied at the rest not arraing as promised on the evening of the same day taking advantage of the flood tide he weighed anchor and went off apparently in great alarm with the whole of his fleet, at the very hour fixed for paying me a third visit.

The beats of the Hon'ble Companys cruiser TI etts which unrived on the 31st January and some country beats with scopys were immediately sent after them but night coming on could not ascertain their course. It is with regret I have to inform you that I have just heard of the town of Tenaserium and everal other villages having been plundered and a considerable number of the inhabitants carried off on the following day by this party. The chief states himself to be high in rank in the employ of the king of Sianu and the inhabitants of all the surrounding country, as well as those of this town, are in the greatest state of alarm and tree idation.

Letract of a letter from Major W. Frith Commanding at Merjut to Brig ulier MCreagh CB Commanding at Rangoon dated Mergut the 15th March 1825

I be g to ocquaint you that on the 6th instant information was brought methative Sianies boits about twenty fivemiles from this took off a boat belonging to this place with ten men in her three of whom excepted and returned. I immediately sent off the boats of the Thetis cruiser, which was here at the time, with a native as a guide, who excepted from the boat, they returned the night follow ing, without being able to see or hear anything of them

On the 10th I again had information that these boats were off the bank of Mergui Island and took a way twenty people from a small village. The next morning I sent out Lucutenant Drever with fit) sepoys in six hired boats to do their utmost to seek some of the maurauders. Mr Driver remained out three days without seeing any of the Samese, he was at the village which had seglitican people tall on from it. I regret to say the inhabitants of Tenasserim have left it, some are here, and others in the jungle I am endeavouring to persuade, them to return to their homes and thut I will send thirty sepoys to remain as a protection for them.

Petract of a letter from Major W Firth Commanding at Mergur to the Officer Commanding at Rangoon dated Mergur the 23rd March 1825

I beg leave to inform you that I have this moment received information that about sixteen hundred Siamese have landed near Tenaseerim I have ordered boats to be procured to take an officer and fifty sepoys to ascertain the views of the Siamese and to desire they may return to their own country and not mokest the inhabitants

Latract of a letter from Mayor W Frith Commanding at Mergur to the Officer Commanding at Rangoon dated Mergur the 27th March 18:25

I had the honour to inform you in my note of the 23rd the information I received respecting the Simmese near Temperature Early on the morning of the 24th instant I sent Lieutenants Drever and Barnet with fifty sepoys to ascertain the correctness of the report. The party returned to day bringing with them a Samnese chief and fifteen men with five muskets and a few pikes, about twenty men with their arms escaped into the jungle

This chief says there is another higher in runk than himself, going about the island with twenty four boats taking off all he can lay hold of These are the people who left thus on the 2nd of February This man says they returned home and told the governor that this country was under the protection of the English They were not believed but ordered back to carry off every one they could by hold of Enclosed is the name of the governor and the place he resides at I intend writing and making him ac juainted with the prisoners I have here in hopes he may re lease those he has from this country

see me, he said he would provided I would separate from my boats, which I did and waited for some time. He then sent some of his chiefs, who would scarcely approach sufficiently near to male themselves understood, however I called to them to say that I would not see any one but the Rajah He then came but instead of one boat brought his whole flotilla and attempted to get between me and my boats, but seeing his intention I prevented I then pulled up to his boat and asked him to come on board mine which he refused in short, I used every means to persuado him but to no effect. I then asked him by whose authority he had taken possession of this island having built houses for himself and people and how he could dare to molest the inhabitants of the province of Mergui well knowing from a former interview about two months ago that they were under the British protection His reply was that he was sent by his King and that he did not care for us I told him that my orders were to bring him to Mercus to see the Governor and that I had no doubt but his hoats would be returned to him on his arrival when he explained matters. During the conversation I held his boat as he would not allow any one to come near him but myelf He then like light ning darted into his cabin and a man who was ly his side during the conversation made a cit at me, which fortunately I escape I and several men presented their muskets no doult with a hostile - intention I therefore gave orders for our men to fre and I can scarcely say which commenced. Finding our musketry heavy he pulled off and I regret to say that in consequence of all our boats crews deserting their cars for some time we could not again come up with their flotilla. He must have suffered severely from our fire as we continued el asing for about an hour when we got so far distant and no hope of coming up with him and thought it advis able to return to the island. The enemy's fire was very well directed for some time and I regret to say two men of ours were killed -one of them an interpreter who has left a willow the other a Burmah -and two sepoys wounded.

I beg leave to bring to your notice the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Bingham and Assistant S rgeon Landsell as also all the native commissioned and non-commissioned officers and separ-

On my return to the island I set fre to the houses. In one of the boats we took I found a small union jack of ours which the se pirates took from the signal post at Tenasseria.

CHAPTER V.

OPERATIONS IN AVA DURING SEPTEMBER AND OCTOBER, 1824

Early in September the Buimese began again to assemble in the neighbourhood of Rangoon They re-occupied the stockades at Dalla, from which they had been driven on the 8th August, but were promptly expelled once more on the 2nd September by a combined naval and military force. A few days lifter they attacked a post on the Dalla side of the river which had been placed there to keep them in check, while a flotilla of their war-boats attempted to capture the gun-boats anchored off the place. Both attacks were repulsed, and five of the war-boats were captured, while the rest were put to flight

Later in the month a combined military and naval expedition, under Brigadier-General Trasei and Captain Olads, R N, was sent up the river to Prallang, and destroyed many stockades and war borts, besides firerafts which the enemy were preparing for the destruction of the British war-vessels and transports in the river

These operations are shewn in detail in the subjoined reports —

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Aschibald Campbell K O.B & to George Strinton, Esq. Secretary to Government Secret and Political Department, §c. $c., $c., Fort William, dated Head-Quarters, Rannoon, the 5th Sentember 1821

The enemy in the Dalla district having of late become very troublesome by their predatory excursions rashing from the creeks and nullabs with which the country abounds upon unarmed boats and even fisherman from the garrison, and having again established the head-quarters of these manualing bands in the stockades taken by Lucienant-Colonel kelly a detachment on the 8th ultimo much strengthened by additional works. I once more determined to drive them not only from the stockade but permanently to a greater distance.

2 For that purpose I directed Major R. L. Evans of the Mudras Army with a detachment of infantry accompanied by two mortars from the brigade commanded by Captain Timbrill and some howitzers from the Madras Artiller, under Captain Kennaa, to proceed up the Dalla crick on the 2nd instant and shell the energi from their position. Such was the excellent practice of the artillery, and gun hoats under the immediate orders of Captain Marryat manned by the officers and crows of His Majesty a Ship Larine and the Howble Company's trainsport Moira that the enemy were soon forced to abandon their defences with some considerable loss and I am happy to say only one man was slightly wounded on our part

3 On taking possession of the stockade Captain Marryat and Major Evans pushed up the creek and succeeded in taking twenty five boats and cances from the enemy who on seeing themselves closed with jumped overboard and escaped into the jumple

A Myor Lians arrangements for cutting off the retreat of the enemy were excellent but the swampy stute of the county and thickness of the jungle prevented their meeting with the success they so well mented. To him and every officer and soldier employed my best thanks are due.

5 I cannot do adequate justice to the sense I entertain of the ability and readmess with which I find myself at all times supported by Captain Marryit and the officers and crew of the ship under his command are ought I to omit mentioning that the officers and crew of the transport ship Moiri are volunteers on every occasion when the enemy is likely to be met with

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Årchibald Campbell, KCB dc. to George Suniton Ing Secretary to Govern ment Secret and Political Department dc., dc. dc. for William dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon the 9th September 1824

I have the honour to forward for the information of the Right Hon ble the Governor General in Council the enclosed report from Cuptain Marryat, His Majesty's ship Larne of an attack upon a small post established a short distance up the Dalla creek.

2. The gallantry and good conduct of all engaged in this first rencontre with the enemy's war-boats affords me much satis faction and Capitam Marryat has particularly mentioned to mo the steadmess with which Lacutenant Wight and a papiet of the 18th Madras Native Infantry received the enemy, both by land and water

3 All accounts concur in bearing testimony to the resolute gulantry of Mr Crawford in defending his veved the half, sgainst very superior numbers although wounded early in the attack, and I big I have to bring his name to the favourable notice of the Right Howble the Governor General in Council. Report from Captain F. Marryat, to Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B, &c., &c., &c., dated Rangoon, the 8th September 1824.

In compliance with your request for a detail of the circumstances which occurred in the attack on the Dalla stockade made by the Burmese on the 6th instant, I have the honour to-inform you that at midnight on the 5th a straggling fire was heard in that direction, and shortly after a rocket was thrown up, the signal previously arranged with the detachment in case of immediate assistance being required.

2. With the advantage of a strong flood tide, the boats of His Majesty's ship Larne proceeded rapidly to the scene of contention, where a heavy fire was exchanged. As our approach could not be perceived from the smoke, we cheered to announce that support was at hand, and had the satisfaction to hear it warmly returned both by the detachment in the stockade and the crews of the gun-vessels. It appeared that the attacks of the enemy had been simultaneous, the gun-brigs lying in the creek having been assailed by a number of war boats, while the detachment on shore had been opposed to a force estimated at 1,500 to 2,000 men.

fire which they poured into the war boats and I trust as an eye witness I may be allowed to express my admiration of the intrepul conduct of the officer commanding the detachment on shore

- 7 The loss of the enemy in this attack cannot be correctly ascertained but from the number of dead in the boats captured and the crippled state of many others it cannot be estimated at less than two hundred or three hundred men
- 8 I have the honour to enclose a return of our killed and

Despatch from Brigadier General Sii Archibald Campbell KCB dc dc to George Swinton Esq Secretary to Govern ment Secret and Political Department &c &c &c Fort William dated Head Quarters Rangoon the 1st October 1824

Here nothing important has occurred since I last did myself the honour of addressing you. The only movement I have lately made was upon Panlang where I had been informed the enemy had established a post and was busily employed in constructing combustible rafts and boats for the destruction of our shipping.

- 2 In consequence of this information I on the 21st ultimo directed Brigadier General Traser with a strong detachment, to proceed to Penlang for the purpose of putting a stop to any preparations for our annoyance and dislodging the enemy from his bost
- 3 The detachment fell in with several stockades and breast works which the enemy instantly executed on the spirited approach of the seamen and troops without in any one instance showing a disposition to come to close quarters as will appear by the Briguier General's report to me of the operations of his expedition which I herewith beg to enclose

No fire rafts were seen

Arrangements were immediately made to disembark a proportion of the troops. On their approach to the stockades, the enemy, after a slight resistance quitted their position and fied to the jungle, leaving several men killed in the right stockade, as reported by Major Sale, His Majesty's 13th Laght Infantry, who led this party.
 - 4 One large gun was found burst, and four others were brought off with several imade and other arms.
 - 5. On the 23rd the flotilla continued to advance without meeting with any obstacle, distance estimated between twelve and fifteen rules.
 - 6 On the 24th, we continued our route up the river about five miles, and in the afternoon fell in with three stockades, which were bombarded for a short time previous to the landing of the troops, who found the different stockades evacuated.
 - On the 25th, several boats filled with troops went in pursuit of some war-boats stated to be near, but did not succeed in overtaking them.
- During this time the pioneers were employed in destroying the different stockades, which being completed, the flotilia commenced its return to Rangoon, at the recommendation of the nival commander.
 - 9 The destruction of the different stockades taken on the 22nd was completed during our passage down the river.
 - 10 I am happy to add that no casualties occurred amongst the troops during the operations, but I understand two or three sailors were wounded
 - 11. The ordnance was taken possession of by the naval commander, with the exception of one gun burst, and another sunk in the river
 - 12. No regular return of the ordinance was taken, in consequence of the hurried nature of the operations, and the necessity of taking advantage of the tide to reach the anchoring ground, but the number of all calibres is estimated by the naval commander at fifteen pieces.
 - 13 The country on both sides of the river was generally wood, and the few open spots, which evidently had been cleared for the purpose of cultivation, are now overgrown with high grass, and covered with a considerable depth of water. Few rillages were seen, and the population appeared inconsiderable. Some herds of buffaloes were discovered, but no other cattle.

My best thanks are due to Captain Chads of His Majest) s ship Arachne for the cordial co operation and assistance I secured from him during the whole of the operations and I can not omit to notice the zeal and alacrity with which Lieutenant Keele and Mr Lett Masters mate, His Majesty's ship Arachne Licutement Bazeley and Mr Winsor of His Majesty's ship Soy hie performed the different duties assigned to them by Captain Chads.

Major Sale and all the officers and men (both Europeans and Natives) evinced the utmost zeal and spirit in the perform ance of every duty required from them and endured their fatigues

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell KCB de de de to George Suinton Esq Secretary to Government Secret and Political Department de. de dated Rangoon the 30th September 1824

The enemy's main body still remains as far as I can ascer tain in the neighbourhood of Donabyo quite disheartened and their commander unable to form any plan for our further annou ance leaving us in undisputed possession of the surrounding country Even the trifling repulse of their corps of warriors from the Great Paroda on the night of the 30th of July* has had its full effect upon the minds of men already damped by fear and con stant disappointment and who in the employment of these invul nerables aided by the confident predictions of their best astrologers appeared to anticipate the intervention of supernatural pover in overcoming difficulties they had so often found insurmountable. The heroes themselves instead of returning to join the Prince of Thurnwaldy after their defeat have fled to concerl themselves in the lills to the eastward and all accounts agree in representing the con try to be in a most agitated and distracted state

2. Last week we were joined by the Native regiment from Madras† Five hundred Magh beatmen from Chittagong have also arrived under the charge of Captain Wiggins, who the tangistrate of Chittagong requested might remain in charge till the pleasure of the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General was known, but who is now so ill as to require his return to Bengal in the transport he arrived in. I have therefore appointed Major Jackson, Deputy Quartermaster-General, to the charge of the Magh Levy, who, with the Chinese and Malays formerly under him, amount to about eight hundred men.

The monsoon is evidently at a close, and although the country still remains completely under water. I am very generally assured that most parts of the district are dry and passable before the end of October, when I trust I shall be able to undertake some movements I have long anxiously contemplated, and if I succeed in obtaining such a supply of cattle as the accounts of the country lead me to expect, I shall consider the chief barrier to our progress as removed.

Hitherto, on every occasion on which the British troops and the Burmese had come in contact, the latter had invariably been defeated. An instance in which a detachment of the army under Sir Archibald Campbell met with a severe reverse is now to be narrated

During the first days of October 1824, intelligence was received that a strong Burmese force had stockaded themselves at Kaikiú, about fifteen miles from Rangoon. The light brigade (composed of the 3rd and 34th Madras Native Light Infantry), two howitzers, and a detachment of the Madras Pioneers, under the command of Brigadier Smith, were immediately detached for the purpose of expelling them, and for that purpose marched from Rangoon on the 5th of the month. Contrary to the usual practice, no European troops were detailed to form part of the expedition, Sir Archibald detailed to form part of the complete that they had another that they had another the troops, "who felt aggrieved that they had not hitherto been allowed to lead the way to victory, but had been employed only to second and support the Europeans," resolved to entrust the enterprise to them alone. Towards evening Brigadier Smith reached a stockade occupied by some of the enemy, who were shelled out of it, after an attempt to take the place by escalade had failed Here Colonel Smith received information which induced him to ask for a reinforcement, including a detachment of European troops. Three hundred more native infantry and two more guns were sent, but the Commander of the Forces refused to allow any European soldiers to take part in the expedition. Thus reinforced, Colonel Smith pushed on, and on the 7th attacked Kaiklu. The result was a disastrous repulse, ending in a precipitate flight from which the British officers with the force with difficulty called the sepoys at Fodaghi

No time was lost in endeadouring to remedy this mistrip, and on the 9th a force under the command of Brigidiei General M Creigh, 770 strong (including 120 Europeans) was despitched from Rangoon to make mother attempt on Kaiklu The enemy appeared, however, to be statisfied with their success (which, of course, they exaggerated endinously), for on arrival at Kaiklu the place was found to have been expected.

Subjoined are the despitches giving the particulars of these affins

Despat h from Brigadier General Sir Archibal t Cimpbell KCB to Gorge Suinton Fsq Secretary to Government Secretan l Political Department to do do Fort William dated Heal Quarters Rangoon the 11th October 1824

Being informed that a pirt of the enemy's force I formerly stated as having concentrated in the vicinity of Pegu had advanced in this direction and taken up a position fourteen miles from hence in the neighbourhood of Aunauben and the pagoda of Kaiklu I ordered o it a recompositing party on the morning of the oth institut consisting of 800 rail and file from the Madres Brigade of Native Light Infantry under its commander Lieutenant Colonel Commandant. Singth of the companied by two camel howsitzers and a competent number of poneers with scaling ladders, &e with orders to advance upon the enemy's position and to attack him as often as he might consider his force and means adequate to do so with effect.

2 I afterwards reinforced the above detail with 300 rank and file from the 28th and 30th Regiments of Madras Native Infantry and two more camel howitzers and with this combined force Colonel Smith arrived at the enemy stockaded position at Aunauben and haikly on the exemp of the 7th instant.

3 I or a detail of the operations of this force during the period of its absence from quarters I beg leave to refer you to the accompanying report.

I That their close was very different in result from the promising commencement made at Todaghi is to me a most painful task to notice that it firms a pleasant part of my dity to observe that Li utenant Colonel Smith's orders fir the attack at wound shortly after and fell together with some of the men of the 3rd Light Infanty. Firing and shouting was at this time distinctly heard in the jungle on our left and Captain Williamson was directed to detach a purty to out flank and keep in check any body of the enemy that might appear in that quarter as well as to ascertain whether any other works had been thrown up to flank the one in front of us.

- 5 In the meantime the howitzers came up were placed in position and opened a fire upon the stockade while Lieutenant Dallas of the 3rd who commanded the detached party gave them a flanking fire and turned the concealed stockade I had conceived from the cross fire existed in that direction. Captain Williamson upon this signal moved forward in double quick to escalade the enemy's works which was executed in a smart and gallant style by that officer seconded by Lieutenant Sherman and the other officers and men of the 3rd Light Infantry Lieute mant Dallas also advanced and entered at the same time from his position Major Wahab with the 34th coming up at the same time made a spirited charge round by the right face of the works but the enemy I regret to say succeeded in effecting his escape with a trifling loss.
 - 6 The rear guard in coming up was attacked by the enemy when Leutenant and Quartermaster Chalons horse was shot dead Partial firing was also continued upon our troops from the front and left flank for some time after
 - 7 A prisoner was taken armed with an English musket From this man I obtained information which led me to suppose that the enemy was in considerable force in the neighbourhood with guns and a party of horse very strongly stockaded. These were spoken of as a different description of soldiery to those we had I illerto encountered. I was induced in consequence to request that I might be furnished with a strong reinforcement. The correspondence that passed subsequently on that subject I need not dwell upon the Commander of the Forces being aware of its nature.
 - 8 On the reinforcement of 300 Native rank, and file of the 25th and 30th Regiments with two more 41 inch howitzers joining the detachment I issued an order of which No I is a copy.* I have thought it necessary to forward it is document to satisfy the Commander of the Forces that every means was used in my power to establish systematic order regularity and a proper understanding between all the parties employed in the operations against the enemy.

[&]quot; bet I cuarded to the Government of India

- 9 At two o'clock the detachment marched Major Wahab leading the first division from which was detailed an advanced guard of a subultern's party under Lieutenant M Clellin
- 10 Prior to moving I directed Major Walnab in the erent of a shot being fired from the enemy to return it and just on without retuding the j regress of the force. The same instructions ngarded breatworks and other obstacles of that nature.
- 11 In a short time a fix w shots were fired from a distance and on the advance party emerging into the plain a small body of horse and foot were seen about six hundred lards in front Loutenant M Clellan continued his course steadily and on nearing the enemy the horse showed a disposition to threaten our fluik. Our advance formed line and supported by Major Wahba estually drove at them and the horse on seeing this motement pulled up and retreated precipitately. Immediately after this a breastwork was discovered, from which several shots were fired. Major Wahab pushed on with out a moment's delay and carried it in great style with a trifling loss on our side.
- 12 A succession of breastworks on our route were stormed and carried in the same rapid and gallant way by the bravery evinced by Major Wahab and the officers of that corps.* In short the spirit that animated both officers and men was such as to ensure success in any undertiking but I regret to say that the triking of these breastworks retarded our progress and the de tachment consequently did not arrive in the vicinity of Kaiklu till fite o clock. It was about this time the guides affected to be improved in the direction it was erected. As the road we were on appeared to be good and leading direct upon a 1 ragol which was represented to by on it e left of the stocklude we pursued it
- 13 Shortly after Captain Williamson with the second drussion was directed to diverge from the column of inverte to the right, and push through the jungle and attack the enemy's works in that quarter while Major Wahab should assul it on the left intending that the third or Major Ogdius a division should be anallable for any other service, it might have been recum-d for
- 14 The necessary reconnoissance having been mad which the creamy allowed us to complete immolested, and the extreme stence that had hithertop revalled induced me to believe that the post had been abandoned but notwithstanding as the lateness of the evening would not allow of any further examination of the enemy a position arrangements were man for massifing the place and Major Wahab was directed to move forward in do this quick with la likers to exclude. This gallant officer game the electing, signal and the fret division with a spirit at animation I never saw surpussed, and with shouts of "Huzza' and 'Déen, Deen, rushed forward to the attack. This was only answered by a round of cannon from the pagoda, which, until now, I was led by the guides to believe was undefended. The enemy in the stockade still observed a sullen silence, not a shot was fired until the division of the 34th and ladders had got well in front of their works. It was then that volleys of grape and muskerry were discharged upon the party at a distance of fifty or suity yards with an effect and regularity bitherto unequalled in this country. Several of the pioneers with the ladders were at this instant. Inocked down together with the leading officers and the men consequently, from the awful and destructive fire that fell among them and the loss of their communding and leading officers were seized with panic and lay down to secure themselves from its further effects.

15 The lateness of the evening rendered this first check irreparable, or otherwise I may have brought up the third or supporting division to renew the attack But to satisfy myself more thoroughly at this momentous crisis of our actual situation I proceeded to the head of the attacking column and there I learnt from Licutenant Sheil of the 3rd Light Infintry, who in the ardour of zeal had moved forward with some of his men that Major Wahab had retired his wounds not admitting of his remaining any longer in advance. I quickly surveyed the enems s works and saw it had a parapet from which blazed one continuous sheet of fire Under these circumstances I had no alternative, I thought left me, I must either bring up the third division and renew the affack to the imminent hazard nav certainty, of losing all or saving what remained by speedily retrograding Of two evils I instantly chose the least, and directed Licutement Sheil to file away to the rear without noise or confu sion, as soon after as possible I sounded the retreat and the several parties and such of the wounded men as could walk assembled on the ground from which the reconnorsance was taken in the first instance the firing from the enemy being still kept up from three positions.

volunteered his services to conduct the party in returning to secure the ladders was attacked by thirty or forty Burmese who rushed upon him with drawn knives and from whom he only escaped by jumping down a deep ravine

- 17 Order regulanty and discipline which had been strictly observed until about this period vanished, and the whole of the ocrips crowded indiscriminately into one general mass Disheartened and dispirited the men became apathetic and ungovernable and appeared altogether lost to the sense of the peris and dangers that threatened them from all around. The inevitable and fatal consequences produced feelings indescribable. With the cool steads and determined aid however of some able officers. I succeeded after some time in bringing the men to reason who were thereby induced slowly and silently to move down to the plain which I had pointed out as the place of rendezous.
- 18 On reach and the bottom of the hill I fortunately fell in with Captain Wilhamson sdivision which had just then emerged from the jungle on the right. From his report I found that the guides had again deceived us for by their account the jungle in that direction was extremely hunted and on clearing it I had reason to suppose Captain Wilhamson would have come upon a plain from which also the guides declared a part of the stockade was to be seen. This was not the case and Captain Williamson after innumerable difficulties could not penetrate beyond a certain distance, and on hearing the retreat sounded thought it advisable to desist from any further attempt and returned accordingly.
- 10 Our meeting at this spot was truly desirable for I immediately directed him to form up two hundred men to the right and left of the road fronting the enemy to cover the retreating columns. This arrangement I was happy to find he had in a great measure anticipated. My next object was directed to forming the men as they came out on the plain. This duty was entrusted to Major Ogilvie whose utmost exertions were used to restore regularity and confidence amongst the troops.
- 20 The wounded attillery and such of the bagage as was recovered were shortly after sent on preceded by a party and the line under Major Ogilve followed slowly and when it had retured to a sufficient distance I formed such parts of Captain William sons covering division as I judged necessary into a rear guard with directions for its following the line and in the crient of a sally being made from the stockades to lait showing as large a front to the enemy as currumstances and the nature of the ground

THE PIRST BURMESE WAR.

- would admit of. This duty was executed by that cool and Straty. officer, aided by the zealous exertions of Captain Williams of the 28th Regiment.
 - 21. The detachment, I am happy to say, arrived at Todaghi at eleven o'clock P.M., without meeting any annoyance on the route The wounded were immediately collected, and through the indefantigable exertions of the medical officers of the 3rd, 34th and 28th Regiments, and the zealous aid of Captain Milne of the Pioneers, in procuring the means of carriage for 'such men as could not be provided with dodts, I was enabled to move again at two o'clock in the morning, an hour previous to which we had been disturbed by a few shots from an advanced party of the enemy.
 - 22. Captain Murray and Lieutenant Aldritt, of the Madras Artillery, were from the first zealous and indefatigable in their exertions in bringing the howitzers to the positions fixed upon, and the steadness and alacrity evinced by them and their men under a galling fire was such as has on all occasions distinguished that corre
 - 23. I have deemed it advisable to make this unusually long report, in order to put the Commander of the Forces in nossession of the most minute events that occurred in the prosecution of this service, and in concluding, I beg leave to add that the gallantry and good-conduct of Major Wahab was particularly conspicuous on all occasions, as likewise that of the officers of his corps and division. To Captain Williamson and the officers of the 3rd Light Infantry I am equally indebted for their cool and stendy demeanour under all the trying circumstances the detachment encountered I cannot appreciate too highly the services of Major Ogilvie and Captain Milne, whose judgment, bravery and steadiness I had frequent opportunities of witnessing. In short, to all the officers and men comprising the detachment praise is due But to Captain Kyd, Brigade-Major, Lieutenant Briggs of the Quartermaster-General's Department, and to Lieutenant Trant, of His Majesty's 38th, the latter of whom volunteered to convey orders, I am particularly indebted for the able assistance they afforded me, and for the cool, steady courage they manifested in all times of danger and difficulty.
 - 24 I have the honour to forward a list of the killed and wounded, and have deeply to lament the severity of the loss sustained, particularly in the death of Captain Allan, who, after having received one wound, persisted in leading on his men, when a second terminated his gallant caree.

On the return to quarters of the column under the command Lieutenant Colonel of mandant Smith CR under the circumstances detailed in my despatch of the 11th instant I lost no time in sending out another force of the strength mentioned in the maroin under the. brammo of Brigadier

M'Creagh CB in the hope that the enemy might be so far elated with his success as to await his arrival in their position at Kaiklu In that however I have been disappointed as will appear by the accompanying report to me from the Brigadier

Report from Brigadier General M MCreagh Commanding the 1st Division, to Brigadier General Sir Archibald Camp bell K C.B &c &c &c., dated Head Quarters of the 1st Division, the 14th October 1834

In obedience to the instructions I received from you on the 9th of this month to dislodge the enemy from the position at kaikla I have the honour to report that I marched from this at five o clock in the afternoon of that day with three pieces of artil lery and the detachment European and Native which you had placed under my orders and armed at the Todaghi stockade at seven o clock on the morning of the 10th when I halted to rest and refresh the troops. I marched again at two o clock in the afternoon of that day leaving the detachment of the 3rd Madras Native In fantry (100 men) to occupy the stockades as a post of communi cation and reached a tolerably favourable piece of ground within about a mile of the enemy's position, at sunset where we passed the night

- 6 We instantly moved on to the villag which was extremely large and calculated to contain many the usuads of inhabitants but altogether d serted and burning rapidly, having been set on fire by them in a great main places.
- 7 Vextious as was this second disappointment it is in some degree satisfactor; to report to you that the information we received from some aged and infirm Burmese in it perfectly agreed in proving that their force is in a state of utter dispersion and panie. The Raywoon himself field across the country almost unattended. Here also we found five more of the sepays and pioneers, victims to the deliberate cruelty of the barbarians in the same manner as those before described.
 - 8 The stockade was built of straight spars and rather lofty, but somewhat unfinished and like those at knaklá no burners at the entrances. We are fortunate enough to procure two or three buffaloes which served to refresh the troops and at three oclock in the afternoon after injuring the stockade and burning the burneds around it. I returned towards haaklá where we arrived at about seven, resumed our marchat three in the morning of the 13th after lurning all the lauts in an laround the works and arrived at Todaghi early in the day. Moved from thence at half past one this morning and reached our lives here between seven and eight o clock and I am happy to add that no individual of any description is missing
 - 9 Frutless as were our efforts to overtake and bring them to action it would still be an injustice to omit reporting to you that the hearty and active exertion manifested in every depart ment of the force was exemplary while the spirit and steady obedience of the officers and men gave ample token that could we have closed with the enemy no one would have enquired his numbers. The manner in which the Bengal Artillery was forced over the most unfavourable ground and various difficult obstacles reflects high credit on Lieutenant Lawrenson and the detachment and the effective exertions of the Pioneers under Captain Milno attracted it is notice of every one.
 - 10 To Myor Sale of His Majesty's 13th Light Infantry who acted as my second in command my best thanks are due and I received on this as on other occasions very viluable assistance from Captain Arken of that corps who has for some months acted as my Aide de Camp

^{*} It will be observed that the casualty retu n gives the total number of officers and men k lied as 23 only while Brigadier General M Creagh a detachment counted 28 mutilated bod es

About the same time as the unfortunate expedition to Kaiklú was despatched, another started for Thantabain on the Lyn giver, and met with very different fortune. At this place, the commander of the Burmese forces, the Prince of Thatawadi, brother of the King, had placed a portion of his army under the command of the Kye-Wungyi, one of the principal ministers of the state, and having resolved to dislodge this force, Sir Archibald Campbell detached for the purpose 300 of the 38th Foot, 100 of the 18th Madras Native Infantry,* and a detachment of the Bengal Artillery,-the whole under the command of Major Evans of the 38th, and accompanied by a naval force under Captain Chads. With the trifling loss of three men wounded on the side of the British, the enemy were driven out of their stockades. These were disman. tled and destroyed, and the detachment then returned to Rangoon.

The particulars of this expedition are given in the subjoined despatches.

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, K C B, &c, to George Suenton, Eeg, Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, Sc., &c., &c. Fort William, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 18th October 1824

I some time since received information that the Prince of Thatmandi had pushed forward a part of his force to Thantabam, upon the Ling river, which joins the Rangoom river above Kennendine, and is noted as passable from Rangoon to the Irrawaddy during the rains

2 As far back as the month of July last I was aware that the enemy had erected very strong stochades in the enemblance though of Thantabain, but since the defeat they experienced on the 8th of that month, until very lately, being merely occupied as a post of observation. I deemed them unworthy of notice, but having now become the head quarters of the Kye-Wungyi and Thakia-Wungyi (first and second ministers of state), already at the head of a considerable force, and receiving dair reinforce.

This regiment went to Burmin as the 2nd Buttalon 10th Madris Natifer Infantry It became the 18th Native Infantry when the re-organization to k place in May 1821. When the Madrias Yuruy was reduced in 1861 the 18th was sel cel for disbondment as a punishment for the junder of a treasure chest, in which a portion of the corps was concerned.

ments and large supplies of military stores for the future operations of their army in this quarter, I considered it high time to interrupt their further proceedings, and as a land column was moving upon Kailklo on the 5th instant, in the hope that mutual advantage might be derived from a simultaneous movement, I on the same morning directed Major Evans, of His Majesty's 38th Regiment, to embark with three hundred rank and file of his own regiment and one hundred Native Infantry from the 18th Madras Regiment, with orders to attack the enemy wherever he might find him posted on the river and could do so with every prospect of success.

- The naval part of the expedition was prepared and led by that zealous and excellent officer, Captain Chads, of His Majesty's ship Arachne, the senior naval officer on the station.
 - 4 How well my orders have been executed by these gallant officers and the brave men under their command, the accompanying detail of operations will show.
 - That their well-carned reputation and undaunted conduct should have ensured them an easy victory over a numerous enemy, strongly posted and acting under the immediate eye of the two first men in the State, is to me most gratifying and satisfactory.

Report from Najor T. Erans, His Majesty's 38th Regiment, Commanding a Detachment, to Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K C B , &c., dated Rangoon, the 11th October 1824,

In obedience to the orders I had the honour of receiving from you to feel the strength and disposition of the enemy upon the Lyng river, and to attack him as often as opportunity might offer of displaying the discipline and valour of the troops under my rommand, on the morang of the 5th instant I embarked with three hundred men of His Majesty's 33th Regiment, one hundred rank and file of the 18th Madris Native Infantry, and a detachment of Bengal Artillery under Captain Timbrell, on board a squadron of gua-boats, flotilly, &c., &c., &c., tuder the immediate command of Captain Chads, of His Majesty's ship Arachne, and the first day's tide carried us as far as Pagoda Point, above Kemendine, at the junction of the Lyng and Panlang rivers

Having been joined by the armed transport Satellite 1. M. next day, the squadron proceeded up the Lyng river with a flowing tide Bodies of the enemy were seen moving up the right bank of the river, and numerous war-boats hovered in our front and kept up a continued but distant fire from cannon with which they were all provided. After the flotilla anchored the high beats in advance under Laeutenant Kellett of His Majesty's ship Arachne pursued the enemy's war boats and having closed with one carrying a gun and a full complement of men boarded and took her in the handsomest style the Burmese jumping' overboard to save themselves

- 3 On the 7th after proceeding about four miles I observed two stockades which were taken possession of without loss and we reached with this tide within a short distance of the large works and fortified village of Thantabain, having in the course of the day destroyed seven of the newly constructed wri boats. On reconciting the village of Thantabain I found it was defended by three long breastworks with a very extensive stockade constructed of large teak beams and fourteen large war boats each carrying a gun were anchored so as to defend the approach to it.
- 4 Having consulted with Captain Chads we advanced to the assault the steam boat with the Satellite and bomb ketch in tow and the troops in their boats ready to land when ordered. In passing the breastworks we received a smart running fire from jinyals and musketry which was returned with showers of grape from the Satellite and observing the enemy evidently in confusion I directed the troops and scaling ladders to be immediately landed and in a few minutes every worl about the place was in our possession. During this night some fire rults of a most formidable appearance were floated down the river, but very fortunately passed without touching any of the vessels.
- At six o clock the next morning we again moved with the tide and passing a narrow neck of land at the junction of the rivers were received with a brisk fire of musketry from a long line of breastworks and a cannonade from a very large stockade on our right. The fire of the latter was soon silenced by the well 1 ointed guns of the Satellite The troops and pioneers were order ed then to land and the formidable stockade was carried by assault without a struggle. It is without exception the strongest work of the kind I have ever seen. The length of the front and rear fices is two hundred yards and the side faces one hundred and fifty yards. It is built of solid timber fifteen feet high with a platform inside all round five feet broad and eight feet from the ground Upon this platform were a number of wooden guns and piles of single an l double headed wooden shot and many jung ils and below we four d soven pieces of iron and brass ordnance. The front of the stocks le is strengthened by breastworks and regular demi lunes, and would contain with case about two thousand men. In the centre of this stronghold we found the magnificent bungalow of the Kye-Wungyi, who, I presume, fled early in the day, although we found the house was perforted with balls in many places and the rooms much stained with blood. I cannot doubt that the enemy's loss must have been severe, but we only found seventeen dead bodies which they had not time to carry off.

- 6. The advanced boats having pushed up the river some miles without seeing any other works. I considered the object you had in view fully accomplished, and we accordingly began to move back to Rangoon. Had not the most marked respect for the British arms been shown during our whole progress up the river, I should have recretted that the enemy afforded me no omortunity of bringing my troops into regular contact with them; but the reduction of the most formidable stockades I have ever seen fully garrisoned by men, as far as I could see, all armed with muskets and animated by the presence of the two ministers of state. Kve-Wungyi and Thakia-Wungyi, sufficiently denotes the terror we inspired, and leaves me the satisfaction to report that not one man was lost to the service during the operations above detailed. I cannot adequately acknowledge my obligations to Captain Chads for his zealous, judicions and cordial co-operation, and the spirited conduct of Lieutenant Kellett, in command of the advanced boats, attracted the notice of every one. To Captain Timbrell, Bengal Artillery. who volunteered his services, and Captain Waterman, Assistant Deputy Quartermaster-General, who accompanied me, my best thanks are due : and I need scarcely add that every officer and man evinced on all occasions that cheerful readiness and deternined valour you have so often witnessed.
 - 7. I cannot close my report without mentioning the very meritorious services of Brevet-Captain Wheeler and the detachment of pioneers that accompanied me. Their prompt and ready zeal in situations of difficulty and danger was not less conspicuous than their indefatigable exertions in performing other parts of their laborious duty, and the very gallant style in which they repeatedly dashed forward with the scaling-ladders was as honourable to themselves as it was a gratifying mark of faith and confidence in the troops employed.
 - Herewith I have the honour to transmit a return of captured ordnance, in addition to which much powder, an enormous quantity of petroleum oil and warlike stores were destroyed at the difficent stockades.

General return of killed, wounded, and missing of a detackment under the command of Major T. Evans, of His Majesty's 38th Regiment, in the attack on the enemy's stockade near the village of Thantabain, on the 8th and 9th October 1824.

Extract from a despatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell KCB &c &c &c died the 16th October 1824.

If I can trust the information I receive I may conclude that the united strength of the Burman Empire is now collecting in my front I have not a doubt that part of the Bandula's army was present at all the late affairs but their presence does not appear to have jet given any additional confidence to the troops we were in the habit of encountering although it is certain they are now very generally armed with muskets

2 The Bandula all the prisoners say has arrived at Donabyo with unbinted powers and is to make a general attack upon our position early in the ensuing moon. Prej aratory orders from him had been received at those posts nearest our line to cut quantities of bamboos of a certain length and collect all the earth oil and cotton the country could supply. These materials were of course intended for the construction of fire rafts but Major Evans party having destroyed all the earth oil collected that part of the General splus is so far disarranged.

3 The Court of Ava has already made great exertions in supplying their army in this quarter with such materials as the country and capital contain all or great part of which has been successively captured by the troops under my command. What further exertions in that respect they may be capable of making I cannot judge but if any inference can be drawn from the wooden guns double and single headed wooden shot lately found in their stockades and the rude I imps of ragged iron used as shot I should conclude their arsenal department must now be at a very low ebb.

4 Since last I had the honour of addressing you one hundred and eighty bullocks have arrived from Madras and more are daily expected. They are of the best caste of draught cattle on that coast and will be highly useful.

During the remaining days of October nothing of importance occurred, beyond the circumstance that Maha Bandula, the most celebrated of the Burmeso generals, had been ordered from Arakan and had assumed command at Donahvo. His instructions were to drive into the sea the "wild stringers who had had the auducity to invade the turntones of Air, or else carry them in chains to the capital to suffer ignoming and torture.

How he carried out these instructions will appear further ex-

CHAPTER VI.

OPERATIONS IN AVA DURING NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER 1824.

Tur arrival of Maha Bandula at Donabyo, with the army he had brought from Arakan, tended immensely to raise the spirit of the Burmese forces, to whom the war in Ava had hitherto been one long series of defeats, brightened only by one solitary success,-that at Kaiklú. The Court of Ava itself acquired fresh confidence. Originally the King and his advisers had looked upon the British at Rangoon as having voluntarily walked into a trap in which they could be destroyed at pleasure; but many months had elapsed, enormous efforts had been made, but the destruction had not only not been accomplished, but our troops had been so constantly victorious, that feelings of alarm and uneasiness had begun to be experienced even by the arrogant "Lord of all the Golden Umbrellas" Now, however, all was to be changed Sixty thousand men had been assembled, and a general believed to be invincible was in command Victory only was to be looked for, and the British Army, if not annihilated or driven back to the sea, whence it had come, was to be led in chains to Amarapura to grace the triumph of the conaneror

The gathering of the Burmese forces in his front was viewed with equanimity by the British commander, who felt himself not only capable of meeting and overthrowing any force that Maha Bandula could bring against hum at Rangoon, but even strong enough to detach a portion of his force, under the command of Licutenant-Colonel Mallet, 80th Toot, on an expedition to Pegu. The state of affairs at Rangoon at the end of November 1821, and the results of the expedition to Pegu, are told in the following despatches:—

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, K C B, §c., Commanding the Forces at Rangoon, to G Swinton, Esq., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c. &c., Fort William, No. 28, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 55th November 1824

Since I had the honour of announcing the capture of Mar taban by the troops under the orders of Lacutenant Colonel Godwin,* I have received intelligence of the surrender of Tenasserum and the town and small province of Yeh. These places, of their own accord, requested our protection, and the whole Burmese coast from Rangoon to the eastward is now subject to the British arms The enemy's troops, which fled from the captured towns and assembled at Yeh, embarked there in forty boats, and I understand have since landed in the district of Dalla The reiterated accounts I have lately received from all quarters of a numerous army collecting in the neighbourhood of Prome for the purpose of expelling us from Rangoon now fully convince me the effort will be made Maha Bandula is said to have been nominated to the chief command and I make no doubt we shall ere long have the whole strength and talent of the empire to contend with in this neighbourhood Lieutenant Colonel Miles, with the European part of the force detached to Tavoy and Mergu, has returned to head quarters

2. Herewith I have the honour of enclosing a report from Lieutenant Greer, of the Hon'ble Company's Marine of a gallant little affair with the enemy's boats on the 7th instant.

- 2 I kept up a constant fire from the twelve pounder and mus ketry until two of the boats came alongsude. Immediately jumped on board of them with the sepoys and succeeded in bayoneting every man In one of the boats there appeared to be a chief whom I shot in the act of darting a spear at me
- 3 The other twelvo boats were coming close up but seeing the fate of the other two made off towards the shore upon which I kept a smart fire while within range I am sorry to state thit during the action one sepoy and one row boatman were severely wounded the former in two places. In each of the boats were from thirty to forty men.
- 4 I cannot conclude this report without recommending strongly to your notice the gallant conduct of the sepoys of the Bombay Marine Battalion in leaping into the enemy's boats and for the destructive and well directed fire they kept up on the approach of the enemy whereby great numbers were either killed or wounded before they came alongside. The conduct of the row boatmen deserves every praise

Despatch from Lieutenant Colonel J W Mallet to Captain Snodgrass Military Secretary to Brigadien General Sir Archibald Campbell K CB &c dated Head Quarters Penn River it & 80th November 1824

I have to report for the information of Brigadier General Sir Archibald Cumpbell K.C.B., that I proceeded with the force which he did me the honour to place under my command in beats up the river on the afternoon of the 26th instant. The advanced beats were fired on while passing Synam Point from the right bank of the river. The expedition proceeded with out further inclessation passing a large village with a stockade on each sade of the brinks in a described and ruinous state on the 27th instant distruct from Rancoon about twenty three miles.

2 On the morning of the 29th a short distance in advance

- 3. In rear of the village is a plain on which the detachments formed, and the artillery landed without loss of time. Beyond the plain, along a very considerable extent, are the remains of one side of the ancient rampart and ditch, all parts of which being surrounded with jungle, I sent out a reconnoitring party, which was accompanied by my Brigade-Major, Captain Briscoe, His Majesty's 41st Regiment, and Captain Jones, of His Majesty's 89th Regiment, who acted as my Aide-de-Camp. During their absence I advanced with the guides, crossed the causeway that led to the city, and then formed to wait the return of the party, who, after having proceeded to the great pagoda of Shoe Madoe, reported that the inhabitants had all fled on their approach, and that the city and every part adjacent was entirely deserted. On hearing this intelligence, I proceeded with the grenadier companies of the Madras European Regiment and 28th Regiment Native Infantry to the city and pagoda, and hoisted the British colours. Among the houses were found a few old men and women, from whom I ascertained that from one hundred and fifty to two hundred fighting men were all the place contained; these had, on our arrival, dispersed in the jungle.
 - 4 The object of the expedition having been thus completed, I made arrangements for my departure. The force was reembarked the same evening, when Captain Chads, Royal Navy, with myself, deeming it advisable to reconnoitre the upper part of the river, and endeavour to assertain the existence of a high road to Prome, he proceeded with the man-of-war's boats about six miles beyond Pegn, and on his return on the afternoon of the 30th instant, the whole weighed for Rangoon.

over the steep and rugged bank of the river; as well as to Licutenant Macartney, of the 1st Battalion Madras Pioneers, for his arrangements regarding the scaling-ladders.

 I must call the particular attention of the Brigadier-General to the zeal and ability shown by Captain Chads, Royal Navy, in his conducting the flotilla, and the valuable assistance

I at all times received from him.

8. In conclusion, I beg to notice the assistance I derived from Captain Briscoe, His Majesty's 41st Regiment, and Captain Jones, His Majesty's 89th Regiment, together with that of Captain Russell, Bombay Artillery, and Lieutenant Trant, His Majesty's 38th Regiment, acting Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General; and the good and steady conduct of the whole of the officers and men, both naval and military, merits my warmest praise.

The Burmese army of sixty thousand men, with Maha Bandula at their head, marching down from Donabyo, arrived in the vicinity of Rangoon during the night of the 30th November, and immediately began entrenching themselves in front of the British position. On the morning of the 1st December they began their operations by opening a heavy fire on the British lines, and directing a furious attack on the outpost of Kemendine. This was promptly repulsed by the garrison (consisting of the 26th Madras Native Infantry and a detachment of the Madras European Regiment) under the command of Major Yates, but it was only the prelude to a series of attacks which lasted for a week, in which the enemy sustained enormous losses without making the slightest impression. On that day also a detachment under Major Sale attacked the left of the enemy, drove the opposing forces into the jungle, and destroyed a portion of the entrenchments they had been so industriously engaged in constructing, and on the following day two successful sorties were made from the great Shwe-dagon Pagoda, which was the key of the British position. But the general policy of Sir Archibald Campbell was to let , the enemy take up his ground without interruption, and then in the fullness of his confidence overthrow him at one blow. On the 3rd and 1th there was only desultory firing between the opposing armies, the Burmese meantime exerting every effort to strengthen their entrenchments and push themselves closer to the British lines. On the 5th the British General, conceiving that the proper moment had arrived for striking a decisive blay, directed two columns on the enemy's left; these forced the Burmese entrenchments with little loss. totally defeated the defenders, and drove them from the field in the wildest confusion, capturing the whole of their guns and military stores. Though thus defeated on his left. Maha Bandula still continued the attack from his right, until the morning of the 7th, when Sir Archibald Campbell attacked and drove him from his works, and dispersed in confusion the immense army that was to have for ever freed Rangoon from the presence of the hated invader. One more effort was made on Kemendine; it failed, and the enemy disappeared altogether from the scene of the conflict. Only on the other side of the river, at Dalla, did any still linger, but it was not for long: they were attacked on the 10th, and, after some resistance, put to flight.

The army of Maha Bandula was not yet, however, finally disposed of. Maha Thilwa, one of their generals whom there has already been occasion to mention, rallied twenty thousand men at Kokien, a few miles to the north of Rangoon, where they strongly entrenched themselves; and, rightly judging that his success was not perfect while this force remained in the vicinity, Sir Acchiladd Campbell determined on moving against them and driving them from the stockades which they had erected. This was done on the 15th December, and after an ardnous and sanguinary conflict, the enemy were expelled from their works and fled to Donabyo, whither Maha Bandula had already betaken himself, and where he was now busily engaged in collecting and re-organising his beaten army.

The detailed story of these important operations, and the noble manner in which the naval forces co-operated in the rout and dispersion of the Burmese army, is told in the subjoined documents.

- 4 Bandula had now fully exposed to me his plan of operations and my own resolution was instantly adopted of allowing and even encouraging him to bring forth his means and resources from the jungle to the more open country on his left where I knew I could at any time attack him to advantage
 - 5 The right corps of the Burmese army had crossed to the Dalla sile of the Rangoon river and in the course of the morning was observed in several divisions crossing the plain towards the site of the rained village of Dalla where it tool post in the neighbouring jungle sending on a division to occupy the almost maccessible ground on the bank of the river raid from which they soon opened a distant fire upon the shipping Another division immediately broke ground in front of Kemen dive and for six successive days tired in nan every effort that hope of success and dread of faultire could call forth to drive the brave 26th and the handful of Europeans from their post while tremendous fire raits and crowds of war boats were every day employed in the equally value endeavour to drive the shipping from their station off the place
 - The enemy s right wing and centre occupied a range of hish immediately in front of the Great Dagon Pagoda covered with so thick a forest as to be impenetrable to all but Burmese trops and their left extended nearly two miles further along a lawer and more open ridge to the village of Pazendoung where their extreme left rested. They were no sconer thus placed in a sition than muskets and spears were laid aside for the pickaxe and shorely, and in an incredibly short space of time every part of their line out of the jungle was strongly and judiciously

- 8. About sunset in the evening a cloud of skirmishers were pushed forward close under the north-cast augle of the pagoda, who, taking advantage of the many pagodas and strong ground in our front, commenced a harrassing and galling fire upon the works. I at once saw that we should suffer from their fire if not dislodged, and therefore ordered two companies of the 38th Regiment under Captain Piper (an officer I have often had occasion to mention) to advance and drive them back. Were it permitted on such an occasion to dwell upon the enthusiastic spirit of my troops, I would feel a pleasure in recounting the burst of arptiment that followed every order to advance against their audacious foe, but it is sufficient to remark that the conduct of these two companies was most conspicuous: they quickly gained their point, and fully acted up to the character they have ever sustained.
 - 9. At daylight on the morning of the 2ad, finding the enemy had very much encroached during the night, and had intreached a height in front of the porth gate of the pagoda, which gave them an enflading fire upon part of our line, I directed Captain Wilson, with two companies of the 38th Regiment and 100 men of the 28th Madras Native Infantry, to drive them from the hill. No order was ever more rapidly or handsomely obeyed, the brute sepoys, vieing with their British contrades in forward gallantry, allowed the appalled Burmans no time to rally, but drove them from one breastwork to another, fighting them in the very holes they had dug, finally to prove their graves.

10 In the course of this day Colonel Mallet's detachment returned from Pegu, having found the old city completely deserted, and gave me the additional means of attacking the enemy the moment the time arrived

- 11 During the 3rd and 4th the enemy carried on his labours with indefatig-ble industry, and but for the inimitable practice of our artillery, commanded by Captain Murray, in the absence, from sovere indisposition, of Lieutenant-Colonel Hopkinson, we must have been severely annoyed by the incessant fire from his trenches
- 12. The attacks upon Kemendine continued with unabting violence, but the unyielding spirit of Major Yates and his steady troops, although exhausted with fatigue and want of rest, baffled every attempt on shore, while Captain Ryves, with His Majest's sloop Sophic, the Hon'ble Company's cruiser Trigmouth and some fictilla and row gun-boats, nobly maintained the long established fame of the British Navy in defending the prasage of the river against the most furious assault of the enemy's war-boats, advancing under cover of the most tremendous fire-raffs, which the unwearied exertions of British sailors could alone have conquered

Cuptain Ryice lost no apportunity of coming in contact with the much vaunted boats of Aia and one morning five out of six each mounting a heavy piece of ordnauce were boarded and captured by our men of wars boats commanded by Lieutenant hellett of His Majesty s ship Anachie and Lieutenant Goldfinch of the Sophice whose interpid conduct merits the highest pruse

13 . The enemy having apparently completed his left wing with its full complement of artillery and warlike stores I determined to attack that part of his line on the morning of the 5th I requested Captum Chads the senior naval officer here to move up the Pazendoung creel during the night with the gun flotilla bomb ketch &c and commence a cannonade on the enemy s rear at daylight. This service was immediately and successfully performed by that officer who has never yet disappointed me in my most sanguine expectations At the same time two columns of attack were formed agreeably to orders I had issued on the preceding evening composed of details from the different regi ments The first consisting of 1100 men I placed under the orders of that gallant officer Major Sale and directed him to attack and penetrate the centre of the enemys line the other consisting of 600 men I entrusted to Major Waller of the 3rd Madras Native Light Infantry with orders to attack their left which had approached to within a few hundred yards of Pangoon At seven o clock both columns moved forward to the points of attack both were led to my perfect satisfaction and both succeeded with a degree of ease their intropid and undaunted conduct undoubtedly ensured and I directed Lieutenant Aichbold with a troop of the Right Honble the Governor General's Body Guard which had been landed the preceding evening to follow the column under Major Sale and take advan tage of any opportunity which might offer to charge

14 The enemy was defeated and dispersed in every direction and the Body Guard gallantly charging over the broken and swampy ground completed their terror and dismay. The Cassay I orse field mixed with the retreating i ifantry and all their utililery, stor s and reserved depots which had cost them so much toil and labour to get up with a great quantity of small arms gilt dattal standards and other trophies fell into our hands. Nover was strandards and other trophies fell into our hands. Nover was the triumph of discipline and valour over the disjointed efforts of irregular courage and infinitely a spenor numbers made move conspicuous. Majors Dennie and Thornbill of the 13th Light Infinity and Brivet Major Gore of the 89th were distinguished by the steadness with which they led their men but it is with deep regret. I have to state the loss we have sustained in the death of Major Walker one of India's best and bravest soldiers, who fell while leading his column into the enemy sentrenchments when the command devolved upon M yor Walrab who gallantly conducted the column during the rist of the action, and I observed the 34th Madria Native Light Infantry on this occasion conspicuously forward

- 15 The Burmese left wing thus disposed of I patiently waited its effect upon their right posted in so thick a forest as to render any attack in that quarter in a great measure impracticable.
- 16 On the 6th I had the pleasure of observing that Bundula had brought up the shattered remnant of his dictated left to streighten his right and centre and continued day and night employed in carrying on his approaches in front of the Great Pago Ia. I ordered the artillery to slecken its fire and the infinity to leep wholly out of sight allowing him to carry on his fruitless labour with little annoyance or molestation. As I expected he mistook this system for timulity and on the morning of the 7th instant I had his whole five posted in my immediate front his first line intrached so close that the soldiers in their barracks could distinctly hear the insolant threats and reproaches of the Burman braces.
- The time had now arrived to undeceive them in their sanguine but ill founded hopes I instantly made my arrangements and at half past eleven o clock everything was in realiness to as stult the trenches in four columns of attack under the superintend ence of Lieutenant Colonel Miles my second in command and commanded by Licuteurnt Colonels Mallet Parlby and Brodie. and Captain Wilson of the 38th Regiment At a quarter before twelve I ordered every gun that would bear upon the trenches to open and their fire was kept up with an effect that never was surnassed Major Sale at the same time as directed making a discrsion on the enemy s left and rear At twelve the cannonade ceased and the troops moved forward to their respective points of attack Everything was done under my own eye but where all behaved so nobly I cannot particularize, but I must in justice state that Captain Wilson and Lieutenant Colonel Parlby's divi sions first made an impression from which the enemy never recovered they were driven from all their works without a check abandoning all their guns with a great quantity of arms of every description, and certainly not the least amusing part of their for midable preparations was a great number of ladders for escalading the Great Pagoda found in rear of their position. The total defeat of Bandulas army was now most fully accomplished. His loss in killed and nounded from the nature of the ground, it is impos sible to calculate; but I am confident I do not exceed the fairest limit' when I state it at 5,000 men. In every other respect the mighty host which so lately threatened to overwhelm us now scarcely exists. It commenced its inglerious flight during last night, humbled, dispersing, and deprived of their arms. They cannot for a length of time again meet us in the field, and the lesson they have now received will, I am confident, prove a salutary antidote to the native arrogauce and vanity of the Burnese nation.

18. Thus vanished the hopes of Ava, and those means which the Burmeso government were seven months in organisms for our destruction have been completely destroyed by us in the course of seven days. Of three hundred pieces of ordance that accompanied the grand army, two hundred and forty are now in our camp, and in muskets their loss is to them irreparable.

Our loss in killed and wounded, although severe, will not.
 I am sure, be considered great for the important services we have had the honour to perform.

20. Of my troops I cannot say enough, their valour was only equalled by the cheerful patience with which they bere long and painful privations. My Europeans fought like Britons, and proved themselves worthy of the country which gave them birth, and I trust I do the gallant sepors, justice when I say that need the troops more strive to obtain the palm of honour than they to rival their European comrades in everything that marks the steady, true and daring soldier.

21. My obligations to Captains Chads and Ryves and the officers and seamon of His Majesty's Navy are great and numerous, in Captain Chads himself I have always found that ready alverity to share our trails and daugers that has ever characterized the profession be belongs to, and the most cordul zeal in assisting and co-operating with me on every occasion. I have also to notice the good conduct of the Hon'ble Company's cruisers, the gun-flotilla and row-boats; nor ought I to omit mentioning the handsome conduct of Captain Biany (acting Agent for the Bengal transports) in volunteering both his European crow and ship's for any service. On the present occasion she was anchored off Dalla, and sustained some less from the enemy's fire. I may also add that every transport in the virer was equally anxious to contribute every possible assistance to the puble service.

22 To Lieutenant-Colonel Miles and Major Evans, commanding the 1st and 2nd Divisions, my most particular thanks are due for the alacrity and promptitude with which my orders were carried into effect by their respective divisions, and Major I'rith, of His Majesty's 98th Regiment, commanding in the pagoda, attracted my particular notice by his steady method of conducting all the severe duties of that important post.

- 23. The services of the artiflery from the three Presidencies, commanded by Captains Timbrell and Montgomerie, under the general direction of Captain Murray in the lines, and of Captain Russell, of the Bombay Artiflery, in the town and its vicinity, were most conspicuously brills int.
- 23. To Captain Cheape, Commanding Engineer, and every individual of that department the greatest crudit is due, and the conduct of Captain Wheeler and the Madras Pronecrs is justly a theme of praise to every officer whose command they were placed under
- 25. The extent and long continuance of our late operations necessarily entailed a most ardnors and severe duty upon my Deputy Quartermaster-General, Major Jackson, whose zeal, talent and activity entitle him to my fullest approbation.
- 26. Lieutenant-Colonel Tidy, my Deputy Adjutant-General, performed the duties of his station with that ability and cheerful radiiness that has ever distinguished lum; and from my personal staff, Captains Suedgrass and Campbell, I received every and and assistance that devotion to the service could command
- 27. Many points may remain unnoticed upon which the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council may desire to be informed, and I have therefore directed my first aide-de-camp, Captain Shodgrass, an officer of long standing and experience, and who has seen much service, to be the bearer of this despatch. He enjoys my fullest confidence, is intimately acquainted with all my views and intentions, and most expable of affording any information that may be required, and I beg most cernosity to recommend him to the kind protection of the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General

Major Yates' report of the defence of Kemendine.

From Major C. W. Yates, Communding at Kemendine, to Lieutenant-Colonel F. S. H. Trdy, C.B., Deputy Adjutant-General, dated Kemendine, the 9th December 1824,

For the information of Brigadier-General Sir A. Campbell. K C.B. and K.T S,* I have to report that the important post of Kemendine, which he did me the honour to place under my command, was attacked by the enemy at half-past four o'clock on the morning of the 1st instant Having distributed my force of infantry, consisting of 58 rank and file of the Madras European Regiment and the whole of the 20th Regiment of Madras Native Infantry, into three divisions, and a covering party of 35 rank and tile from the 26th Regiment for the guns which I had appropriated to the defence of the western or river front, and every officer and man under my command being acquainted with his post and the duties I expected of them at the moment of attack, the attempt to surprise on the part of the enemy would have been unavailing and impossible. The strongest division was destined for the defence of the eastern front of my stockade, which, from the nature of my defences and the approach to them, I was well aware would be the position in which the enemy would most strongly invest himself and offer to me the most formidable attacks against which I should have to operate. Confidently impressed with this assurance, I could not for a moment hesitate to confer this important trust on that vigilant, gallant, and zealous officer Captum Robson of the 26th Regiment , and now that a siege of seven days has ended in the precipitate flight of the enemy I have to congratulate myself and the service on my choice having fillen on an officer who through the whole of this arduous struggle has gone hand and heart with me in every The command of the second division or that appro I rested to the defence of the nerthern front was conferred by me on Capt un Rehe of the 26th Regiment who proudly maintained the high of muon I I ad formed of I un in the collected and gallant manner in which he received the first dreadful rush of the enemy which was made on his division and under cover of a large fire rift sent doen the river with a double view of hurling destruction among the shipping and covering the advance of the enemy with their ladders to escalade The appearance of this attack before daylight was awfilly sublime bit so collected and un daunted was Captain Rele that he inspired a confidence and courage in his men which rendered the attempt fruitless against our land defences though it deprived me of the services which I lad expected from the Honble Company's cruiser Teignmouth and exposed the defence of the western or mer front solely to the little band of European and Native artillery (with only two six pounder guns and one twelve pounder carronade) under the command of Lieutenant Aldritt of the Ma Iras artillery The grati tude I owe to Lieutenant Aldritt the admiration with which his conduct and his skilful application of his science have inspired me are of a nature so exalted that I feel quite unadequate to their expression The glorious fact that with these small means alone le kept at bay the innumerable war boats of the enemy will convey a higher eulogy to the comprehensive mind of Sir Archibald Campbell than any tribute to lis valuable services which I am competent to offer During the whole of this arduous day and night the enemy's charges with the view to escalade were so frequently repeated that the stockade was one continued blaze of fire On the north east angle the enemy got so many jinjals to bear that exposed as the situation was I felt myself compelled to run a twelve pounder carronade up to the top of an old pagoda. To effect this under the galling and incessant fire of the enemy was so daring and dangerous a service that I called for volunteers to execute it and myself encouraged them by mounting the pagoda with them and giving in person the necessary d rections for the accomplishment of my vic vs This object once attained its a liantages were palpibly evident to all the gli even when in the act of answering a q estion from me I lal the painful mortification of seeing Sergeart Bond of the Madras L ropeat Regiment of ot dead A braver or a nore willing soldier never gruced the British uniform Almost at the same moment, and before sand-bags could be got up, Gunner Thomas Chamberlain, of the artillery, was grazed in his shin—though not returned among the wounded—by a shot which passed through his trowsers and indented the gun-carriage. I beg leave carnestly to recommend this meritorious soldier to the consideration of Sir Archibald Campbell for his indefatigable exertions in the battery during the whole of the siege.

- 2. The morning of the 2nd was ushered in by another fireraft floating down the river, and a repetition, on the northern and castern fronts of the stockade, of a desperate charge for escalade. The steady, rapid fire of my brave soldiers mowed down these invaders in multitudes; yet, nevertheless, with a daring intrepidity highly creditable to them, their attempts to escalade throughout thus day and night were repeated so soon as their slain could be removed and their troops could raily.
 - 3. Until about one o'clock on the 3rd, when the enemy's trenches not being completed, every energy was exerted towards our overthrow by escalade, I was left solely to my own land resources. At this critical juncture Lieutenant Kellett, of His Majesty's ship Arachne, came to my aid with a gun-brig and four gun-boats. Never was assistance more seasonable, and never did any officer of the British navy more gallantly or more ably afford it. To recapitulate the various services I received at the hands of Licutenant Kellett is impossible. By the extremely judicious distribution made by Lieutenant Kellett of his force, I was enabled to remove great numbers of my men from the second and third to the first division, which, without this addition to its strength (and which could not have been yielded without the aid of Lacutenant Kellett), I am really of opinion that my eastern front could not have held out against the repeated and impetuous charges of the enemy In addition to these extraordinary exertions of Lieutenant Kellett, I owe him a debt of gratitude which never can be forgotten or repaid, for the salvation, through his intrepid valour and serman-like conduct, of thirty out of fifty men of the Madras European Regiment sent out to replace deficiencies by sickness and killed and wounded in my detachment from that corps Owing to the excessive darkness occasioned by the smoke from the incessant fire kept up by ourselves and the enemy, and the extreme rapidity of the tide, these poor fellows were carried past Kemendine, and anchored by the cowardly Native creus of their boats immediately under a heavy battery of the enemy. The boatmen hid themselves in the bottom of the boats. and these unfortunate soldiers, ignorant of the tides or the management of the boats, had mevitably fallen a sacrifice to the rengeance of the enemy, but that the gallant Kellett, alive to compression and careless of danger or of death holdly run his own vessel under the gains of the enemy and at the immunent risk of his own his and to his eternal homour presented the lives of thirty of his countrymen. In this during exterprise Lieutenant Kellett was seconded by Mr. Vakutine Preksy, a midshipman on board of His Myesty a ship Arachus and from whose services throughout the stege 1 have derived so great advantage, that I confidently trust Sir Archibell Campbell will confer on me the favour and on the service the justice, of bringing the highly valuable and meritorious conduct of these two gentlemen to the favourable consideration of the Naval Commander in Chief in India.

- 5 At about three o'clock on the morning of the 4th His-Majests a ship Sophicanchort doff Kemendine, and although it were presumption in me to offer an eulogy, or even an opinion on the conduct of Captain Ryces yet, as I should outrage my own feelings were I not to acknowledge my lasting gratitude to him for his masterly assistance and generous aid upon all occasions, I feel no hevitation in trusting to his liberal mind to parlon this slight tribute of my unfagued obligations and gratitude
- On the morning of the 5th the enemy had so completely entrenched himself in all directions around me, and kept up so continued and galling a fire on my eastern front and particularly from a heavy battery of guns and junjals in front of the gaterny that I was induced to make a sortie on this battery in the hope of wresting from him his mounted ordnance. In this dangerous service I feel deeply indebted to Caj tain Page of the 48th Regi ment for the gallant manner in which he stepped forward and volunteered to command a party of forty Luropeans and forty Natives, Lieutenant Weir of the Madras European Regiment, and Lieutenant Reynolds and Eusign Smith, of the 26th Regiment also came forward in the most valorous manner, earnestly entreating me to avail myself of their services in this daring enterprise The position of the enemy was however found to be so excessively strong and his defences so extensive, that I lament to say this little band were driven back with the loss of two Europeans killed and the gallant Ensign Smith and two Europeans severely wounded The enemy discomfited by the dreadful slaughter with which his men were driven back from every attempt to escalade had recourse to a never ceasing fire from his guns his almost innumerable ginjals and his enormous force of musketry from various intrenchments and batteries which he had constructed during the fourth and fifth days of the siege On the evening of the fifth day the enemy reinforced by immense numbers who had been driven by a sortie, under the command of Major Walker, from their intrenchments at the foot of the Great Pagoda at Rangoon, again rushed with impetuous fury to escalade the southern and eastern fronts of the stockade Again, however, he was driven back, and again he rallied and returned to the charge, but to be again routed with dreadful slaughter.

- 6. On the morning of the sixth day of the siege, Captain Chads of His Majesty's ship Arachae, confurred on me the honour of a visit, and in the hand-omest and most flattering manner offered me additional succour to that which had already proved so eminently valuable to me in my defence of this important post, and in the evening sent up the Powerfal, bomb-ressel, with a sergeant-major of the Bombay artillery, whose meety of precision in throwing shells over the stockade and into the enemy's batteries was eminently serviceable to me. During the whole of this night the guns of His Majesty's ship Sophie and the men-of-war boats, with the mortars of the Powerful and the guns on shore, played over and around the stockade in the most beautiful and masterly manner, hurling destruction on the enemy, while it excited emulation and confidence in the troops.
 - 7. Throughout the whole of the sixth and seventh days the enemy continued to fire upon us from the trenches, but again reinforced by the multitude who had been driven from their trenches by another sortic on the castern wing of the enemy's line of intrenchments against Rangoon, two more most desperate attempts were made to escalade by the eastern, northern and The efforts, however, though southern faces of the stockade supported by multitudes, were fruitless as the former, under the incessant and well-aimed fire of my sturdy band, which again supported, as on the preceding evening, by the naval force, and auded by the guns under the ever-vigilant and gallant Aldritt. hurled destruction on the disheartened foe, who, at about halfpast four o'clock on the morning of the eighth day, terminated the stege of Kemendine in a precipitate retreat, leaving many of his intrenching apparatus, his spears, some powder, and vast numbers of musket and gingal balls behind him.
 - as The killed of the enemy until the last day had been carefully removed; but in these last desperate charges his loss had been so great, and his light was so preciptate, that many were left as they fell, and the remains of immense numbers are so lightly covered that the smell all around us is absolutely dreadful. On the last day of the siege, and in one of their charges on the eastern front, I have reason to thank a chief of high rank was slain, as no less than five several attempts by bands of six or cight each, were made to rescue a body which hy close in hy the stockale and was covered by a cloth, and in each attempt three or four of their people were shot dead and the body, in consequence remained till dark. Since the retract of the enemy one grace, will by differing from all others has been perceived and it is covered over with a very thick teak board. I have also heard that the Communder in Chief of the Burman army fell in one of the desperate charges made during the first night of the siege. The intreachments of the cierny, which since the retreat I have myself examined are is also of a nature so wonderfully strong and so immensely extensive that I cannot but attribute them to the incessant labour of many thousand individuals.

- Where each officer under my command evinced every proud qualification of the soldier it is impossible to bring to Sir Archibald Campbell's notice the individual merits of all, but I may at least be permitted to observe that every officer and man both I uropean and Native under my command has gruned to himself my gratitude and my admiration Licutement and Quartermaster Gordon though labouring under much present ill ness and great debility, persevered nevertheless (even against my advice) in the active discharge of his duties To Lieutenant and Adjutant Eastment I owe a large debt of gratitude for a per severance in that zerlous ardour for the public good which shone conspicuous in his gallant bearing at the battle of Mehidpore and has emmently marked his conduct ever since he has been Of Mr Assistant Surgeon Bright under my command. cannot speak in terms of too high culogy for never during any siege were energy humanity and skill more eminently constitution cuous than in him throughout the whole of this arduous contest I rom the commencement of the attacl every sepoy of the 26th Regiment who was in hospital and who could possibly carry a musket entreated permission to lend his aid in the general struccle and in consequence after eight nights and seven days without either officer or man having scarcely entered a house or changed his clothes the enemy had not retreated many hour before the hospital list increased to one hundred and torty and very many more I fear must shortly be added to at
- 10 I have the honour to enclose a list of the I illed and wounded and of the expenditure of anomunition during the siege and beg leave to conclude this despatch with an act of justice to determined ment and dauntiess valour by earnestly recommending to Sir Archibeld Campbell that Corporal John Lucus of the Ma Iras European Regiment who served during the whole of the siege in the battery in which the gailant Sergeunt Bond fell and

Extract of letter from Captain Chads, of His Majesty's sloop "Arackne," to Captain Coe, dated Rangoon, the 8th December 1824.

On the 30th ultimo the enemy's boats were seen by the Hon'ble Company's cruiser Teignmouth, at the advanced post above Kemeadine, coning down in great numbers loaded with men. The same evening they came forward with fire-rafts, which obliged the Teignmouth to slip and go below Kemeadine to avoid them. This unfortunately left that post exposed to a most furious attack on every side,—the enemy's war-boats on its front; but it was nobly defended by its garrison, under Major Yates, and the cinemy repulsed. On the next day, 1st December, the enemy were seen in great numbers advancing towards Dalla,—about five thousand men, and they also surrounded the Dagon Pagoda, where a constant heavy fire has been kept up

2. Captain Ryces of the Sophie, in command during my absence, precured a guard of one hundred sepoys from the General, for the transports, and placed this ship in her old statue, about a nule and a half in advance of the shipping, to enfilade the Madra lines, and also ordered the Teignmouth back to her station to support the post at Kemendine At daylight I returned and found things in this state, with the exception of the Teignmouth having been again driven from her station duringthe night by fire-

rafts and the post at Kemendine again subject to furious and incessant attacks I immediately sent the pinnace up under Lieutenant Kellett and Mr Frekey admirally inidalipiman to gain information and reconneitre and shortly after three gun boats under Mr Coyle, inidalipiman with a party of my scamen to fight the guns, this assistance was most timely, as the garrison was sorely pressed in every direction from which critical situation Lieutenant Kelletts highly judicious and determined gallint conduct immediately relieved them by clearing both their flanks of the enemy by showers of grape shot. This service performed by a single boat in the face of hundreds of the enemy a boats was the admiration of the whole garrison, and Major Yates has express ed himself to me in terms the most gratifying for the able assist ance I jeutenant Kellett afforded him.

- 3 The Teignmonth shortly afterwards resumed her station and was constantly engaged with the enemy s war boats which had long guns in their bons and annoyed her a great deel. In the afternoon finding the enemy were making every effort to gain that post and as it was of the last importance both in a military and must point of view I ordered the Sophie up for its support with three more gun boats and our party under Lieutenant hellett to remain. Whilst this post is held the enemy cannot amony the shipping at Rangoon by fire as the distance is great and the winding of the river with the fire booms land out throw all the rafis upon the opposite side.
- 4 The enemy upon the Dalla side having begun to throw up works I ordered the Satellite armed transport in charge of Lioutenant Dobson of the Larne with a party of seamen from this ship to the support of the Good Hope transport already for some time stationed there and several of the small gun vessels. These vessels have been from first to last occasionally exchanging shot with the enemy disnounting their guns as fast as they got them up and the commander of the Good Hope Mr Binny is entitled to my best thanks for handsomely coming forward on this occasion and for the essential service he has performed.
- 5 Early on the 3rd the Sopkie took her station off Komothine. With the ebb the enemy again brought fire rafts down not lighting them until within a very short distance of the ships with their war boats fixing their shot over them to prevent the approach of our boats. The Sopkie cleared them but the Teojim mouth was touched and on fire for a short time without dumage During this day the enemy became extremely daring finding their shot went father than ours upon which I sent the Sopkie two long times which Lept them farther off. The enemy is boats becoming more bold it was thought right to endeayour to give them 8.

check, and Captain Ryves, thinking they might be surprised laid his I lans accordingly and succeeded to the fullest extent. A report of this gallant attack I enclose (No 2) which will again bring to Jour notice officers I have already mentioned to you for their good conduct. The result of this defeat of the enemy's war boats has been highly beneficial not one having ventured within gun shot since. The two ships however have had their hands quite full in keeping up a constant fire on the enemy attacking Kemendine and throwing up works against them to mount guns in which were dismounted as soon as got up without their having done any material damage.

- 6 In the evening Sir Archibald Campbell communicated to me his intention to attack the enemys left wing towards Pazen doing and requested a diversion to be made by a naval force up that river a report of which I enclose (No 3) and which ended in the total defeat of that portion of the enemys force
- 7 In the afternoon finding the enemy at Dalla strengthen nightenselves I sent the Poworful mortar vessel over and threw a few shells which had considerable effect
- 8 On the 6th in the morning finding the enemy still per sisting in his attacks on Kemendine I sent the mortar vessel up there which rendered the post very essential service and relieved the garnson considerably. The enemys \ \text{at boats still continue} \text{ in great numbers} \text{ but at a respectful distance}
- 9 On the 7th in the morning the enemy were seen very busy with rafts and boats for fire and with the strong ebb they brought them down reaching nearly across the river but as their boats now do not venture close they were fired earlier they consisted of upwards of twenty six rafts and eight large boats all lashed together. The Sophie just touched the outside one with out injury and held her ground.
- 10 At noon the troops at the pagoda made another sally and carried the whole of the enemy's entrenchments taking an entering an amount on &c. On receiving this information I mendiately sent every disposable man from this slip under Mr Manley the master with twenty sepoys in the slip under Mr to Captain Ryves to endeavour to intercept their boats and cut of P int without seeing above four or five small boats the enemy having retreated and described the neigh bourhood of Kemendane.
- 11 Thus Sir has this formidable attack ended in the total discomf ture of the enemy having called forth from the very small force I have the honour to command in every instruce the greatest gallantry and uniform good conduct under the utmost exertions by day and night, the greatest part of them having been in the boats since the starting of the expedition to Pegu on the 26th ultime

- 12 From Captain Ryves I have received all the aid and counsel that a good and valuable officer could afford, and his determined perseverance in holding his ground when the fire-rafts came down ment the highest commendation, and from his ready and zealous co operation with the post at Kemendine, that place was greatly relieved in the arduous contest it was engaged in.
- 13 Of Lieutenant Kellett I cannot speak in terms sufficiently strong to express my admiration of his uniform gallantry
- 14 Leutenant Goldfinch's conduct has also been most con spicuous, together with all the midshipmen named in my reports, not one of whom but have shown individual acts of great bravery
- 15 Also to Mr Manley master of this ship who has, from necessity, been frequently left in charge during my absence, I feel much indebted.
- 16 These officers the scamen and mannes I had the pleasure to serve with I earnestly beg to recommend to your most favourable attention *

Licentenant Kellett came up with some of the first with heavy guns, and Lacutenant Goldfinch, passing him whilst taking possession, captured the boat of the commander of the war-boats with the flag, her crew running into the jungle. The chase was continued three or four miles, when Lieutenant Kellett judged it prudent to secure his prizes, having an enemy of considerable force in his rear up another branch of the river

Despatch from Captain H D Clads, Senior Naval Officer to Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell K OB $\xi$, $\xi$ & $\xi$ dated on board the Arachne Rangoon the 10th December 1894

It becomes a most pleasing duty to me to recommend to your favourable notice officers in the Honble Company's service whose good conduct has been conspicuous in the recent attack of the enemy The first I ought to name is Mr Binny agent for transports of the Bengal division in charge of the Good Hoje transport That ship Sir with the British crew of the Pesource who handsomely volunteered did all the duties of a man of war in silencing the enemy's guns as they mounted them at Dalla. Mr Hornblow also agent for transports of the Madras division in charge of the Morra has also shown very great zeal in f rward ing all the late ard ious services, and the British crew of his ship in charge of the mortar ves el lave continued their usual good condict. In the attack on the enemy's war boats Lieutenant hellett speaks in high terms of the gallar try of Lieutenar t Clarke and Mr Boscawen of the Honble Company s crut er Ter mmouth and Mr Lindguist, in charge of the row boat this latter tomor officer I have also had reason to be much r leased with

Great Pagoda, and as I was well aware they would not remain long after the news of Bandula's defeat had reached them, I at once determined to assault their works

- 2 Detachments from His Majesty's 89th, the Hon'ble Company's 1st Madras European Regiment, and the 43rd Madras Native Infantry were immediately ordered under arms, and just as the moon arose they moved across the river, under the command of Major Ferrior of the latter corps, landed, and jumped without a moment's hesitation into the enemy's trenches. Many Burmese were slain in the short conflict that ensued. They were driven at the point of the bayonet into the jungle in their rear, and ten good guns, with many small arms, fell into our possession.
- 3 Major Ferrior kept his ground during the night, and in making a reconnaissance early in the morning found the enemy still occupied some stockades in the jungle in considerable force. I, in consequence, directed Lieutenant-Colonel Parlby, with a reinforcement of His Majesty's 89th Regiment under Major Basden, and 300 of the 12th and 30th Madras Native Infantry, to join Major Ferrior, and attack the enemy wherever he might be found Lieutenut-Colonel Parlby's coolness and judgment fully confirmed the high opinion so justly entertained of him He drove the enemy in great confusion from all their strongholds in the jungle, and they are now only seen in unconnected groups at a great distance on the plane.
- 4 Lieutenant-Colonel Parlby bears the most honourable testimony to the valour and intrepudity of Major Basden and His Majesty's 89th Regiment, and pays the lighest compliment to Major Ferrior and all the other troops employed, as well as to Captain Russell, of the Bombay Artillery, who accompanied him.

Despatch from Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.O.B., Le, to G. Swinton, Esg. Secretary to the Government of India, Secret and Political Department, Fort William, dated Head-Quarters, Rangoon, the 16th December 1824.

When I had the honour to address you on the 10th instant, I did not expect I should so soon have the pleasure of communicating to you that it has again pleased God to favour us with a great victory over the army of Bandula, re-collected after his late defeat and considerably reinforced on his retreat, which latter circumstance induced him and his chiefs to determine upon one more great effort to retrieve their diagracs. For this purpose they succeeded in rullying and forming, with the reinforcements mentioned, a force amounting to between twenty and twenty-five thousand men, and returned to the village of Korkey, about three miles from the Great Pagoda, and immediately commenced intrenching and stockading, in point of position, with a judgment such as would do credit to the best instructed engineers of the most civilized and warlshe nations.

On the evening of the 12th a deserter from the enemy (amongst much other information) declared it to be their intention to attack our lines on the morning of the 14th (pronounced

- a fortunate day by their sooth-ayers) determined to sacrifice their lives at the dearest rate as they had nothing else to expect than to do so ignominiously by returning to the presence of their king disgraced and defeated as they had been. This information was too circumstantially given to be disregarded and I prepared accordingly. On the 13th the enemy a movements left little doubt on my mind of the truth of the deserter's information.
- 3 About half past two on the morning of the 14th a for mulable fire raft was launched from a little above Kemendine which I awever effected nothing, and at the same time their emissaries succeeded in setting fire to Rangoon in several places at once by which abo it one fourth of the town has been destroyed notwithstan ling the utmost eff rts of the garrison and the well disposed part of the ini abitants to get the fire under
- 4 The 14th passed will out any other attempts on the part of the enemy During the day however 1c was observed above Kemendine to transport large bodies of troops from the Dalls to the Rangoon side of the river
- 5 For many urgent reasons I determined to attack Bandula on the following day rather than wait his pleasure as to time and place of meeting. The position he had taken np (though formidable) was still more favourable than any he had 5t presented me with I also derived much advantage from a knowledge of the ground the enemy, were in possession of having been over it with a part of my force upon a former occasion.
- 6 On the morning of the 15th my columns of attack were formed as follows --
- The right consisting of two hundred of His Mujesty's 13th Light Infantry and three hundred of the 18th and 34th Madras Native Infantry under the direction of Brigadier General Cotton with one field piece and a detachment from the Right Hon'ble the Governor General's Body Guard under the command of Lieutenant Archbold This column I directed to make a detour round the enemys left and if possible to gain the rear of his position and there wait the preconcerted signal of attack from me I marched myself with the left column which consisted of five hundred Europeans from the 38th 41st 89tl and Madras European regiments and three hundred Natives from the 9th 12th 28th and 30th Regiments of Madras Native Infantry five field pieces and a detachment of the Body Guard under the command of Lieutenant Dyke intending to attack the enemy is front On arriving before the enemy s position it appeared truly formulable and such as I would hardly have felt musclf warranted in attack ing with a less force than ten thousan I men had I not from experience known and appreciated the valour of the troops I had the honour to command Of this column two divisions were formed, giving the command of one to Lieutenant-Colonel Miles of the 89th, and the other to Major Erans of the 38th Regiment.

- 7. My dispositions being complete, the preconcerted signal guns were fired, and I had the pleasure to hear Brigadier-General Cotton's reply, which assured me that all was ready on his side. The artillery now opened, and the three columns rushed on to the assault with the most determined and enthusiastic bravery, and in less than fifteen minutes were in full possession of this most stupendous work, making the enemy suffer most severely, and obliging hun to leave his eamp standing, with all the briggage and a great proportion of their arms and ammunition. On entering we were disappointed to find that Bandula did not command in person, having retired to a distance, leaving his orders with the chief in the immediate command of the post, whom we found had been mortally wounded in the assault.
 - Whilst this was going on within, the Governor-General's Body-Guard made some gallant charges amongst the retreating infantry and Cassay horse, dealing death and destruction to all around
 - 9 When it is known that thirteen hundred British infinity stormed and carried by assault the most formulable intrenched and stochaded works I ever saw, defended by upwards of twenty thousand men, I trust it is unnecessary for me to say more inprise of men performing such a prodgy Future ages will scarcely believe it! The prisoners declare that our appearance before their works was treated by them all (from their generals downwards) with the utmost derision and contempt, so confident were they in their immense superiority in numbers and the fancied security of the works they had constructed
 - 10 Our gallant frends afloat were determined not to let this ausqueous day wass without their shore of its operations. Captain Chads directed that intrepul and enterprising officer Leutenant Kellett of His Majesty's Arachie to proceed in command of an expedition up the river, and avail himself of any opportunity which might offer of attacking the enemy's war boats. He soon came up with a fleet of two-and-thurty, and, after some little maneuvring to encourage the enemy to a confidence that they could, by their superiority in rowing, keep their own distance, suddenly put the full power on the Diana steam-boat, and immediately cut through the midst of their fleet, throwing their commanders and crows into the utmost consternation, some making for the shore, and others leving overboard in the middle of the river, all abandoning their boats, and leaving Lieutenant Kellett at leisure to take possession of and bring away thirt) out of the thirty two originally discovered and to destroy on his return soveral fire rafts as well as materials and combustibles for their future construction. Every day's experience of the zeal and cordinalty with which Captain Chads (and every individual composing the naval part of the expedition) co operates with mo in carrying on the combined service increases my sincere obligations and ments my warmest thanks.

- 11 Although I have already endeavoured to describe to the Right Houble the Governor General in Council the enthu spatic brayery of the troops engaged vesterday still I cannot omit to mention the able and judicious aid I received from my becond in command Brigadier General Cotton The movements by which his column was brought to the point of attack through an intricate country were well executed and the attack itself after wards was conducted with the most beneficial effects to the general success of the day To Lieutenant Colonel Miles and Major Evans who led the other columns of attack, every praise is The exertions of Captain Montgomerie commanding the artillers in the field together with those of Captain Cheape and Lieutenant Underwood of the Engineers were most conspicuous. Lieutenant Colonel Tidy, Deputy Adjutant General and Major Jackson Deputy Quartermaster General afforded me on this day as well as on all former occasions their able and zealous aid.
- 12 In the list of wounded will be seen with regret the name of Major Sale of His Majesty a 13th Light Infantry an officer whose gallantry has been most conspicuous on every occasion since our arrival in Rangeon I am happy to say that his wound though severe is not dangerous and I trust his valuable services will not long renan unavailable

Within these last three days the enemy haring returned and re commenced offensive operations partic larly by amonying us with immense quantities of fire rafts one of which consisted of upwards of sixty cances besides bamboo rafts all loaded with oil and combustibles I thought it probable these preparations might be destroyed and as I had before sent a force up the Panlang branch of the river without finding anything I this time ordered one tp the Lyne branch under Leutenant Kellet of this ship to consist of the steam reseal with this ships?

The enemy finding themselves in this situation drew up in a regular line to receive them, this gallant little band was not however to be daunted by their show of resistance, but nobly dashed on although the Prince of Wales was out of sight. The heavy fire from the boats carronades and musketry threw the enemy into confusion and praise and they flew in all directions leaving us in possession of three of their large war boats (the chief's one mounting three gans and pulling sixty oars, the other two one in their bowy nine and six pounders) with about forty other boats of all descriptions many of them lorded with ammunition and provisions for their army before Rappoor

THE CONQUEST OF ARAKAN.

It will be remembered that when the plan of operations against the Burmese was decided on in the early part of 1821, it was determined to maintain a strictly defensive attitude on the Chittagong frontier. policy was not departed from later on, notwithstanding the defeat and destruction of the British detachment at Ramú, and except a descent on the island of Ramrí in October 1821, nothing was attempted, either by sea or land, against the Burmese in Arakan, though inaction in that direction was not only calculated to have a depressing influence on the minds of the native soldiery, but was very likely, at the same time, to produce a most undesirable political effect throughout the length and breadth of India, wheresoever rumours of the Ramu disaster (and those certainly not unexaggerated) might succeed in penetrating.

The attempt on Ramri Island, alluded to above, and a boat action on the coast which preceded it, are described in the following reports:—

On the morning of the 10th instant, at daylight, the look out the most head announced three large boats to be in sight, closs under the shore of Ramree and about five or aix inles distant from the firgate, rowing to the southward. Immediately direct-

Extract from a letter from Captarn G Barnes Commanding the Last India Company's frigate "Hastings," to G Swinton, Esq. Secretary to the Bengal Government, dated Cheduba Roads, the 21st September 1824

I have great pleasure in transmitting to you, for the information of the Right Hon'ble Lord Amherst, Governor General in Council an account of a most daring, well conducted and successful attack, made by two cutters belonging to the Hon'ble, Campany's fingate Hastings, under my command, on four boats belonging to the enemy on the coast of Ramree, and trust that my entering somewhat into detail will be excused as I am anxious to do justice to the officers and men who so gallantly achieved the dispersion of the enemy, whose numbers were so disproportioned to their little force ad the two ten-cared cutters to be manned and armed, and sent six marines in each, placing both boats under the command of Licutenant Harrison, second of the friente, Mr. Graves, master's mate, being in charge of one boat, with orders to bring them alongside, if possible. Some time after the cutters had left the shin. I observed a fourth boat, and could plainly perceive they were all full of men; our launch unfortunately being absent watering. I manned and armed the two boats belonging to the pilot brigs Meriton and Planet with European seamen and marines, and despatched them to the assistance of the cutters, but owing to the start they had of them, and these being very heavy-pulling boats, they were not able to assist in the capture, which I cannot better describe to His Lordship than by transmitting the very modest but manly letter of Licutenant Harrison, describing the affair. Annexed I have the honour to send a list of the arms captured. and understand a considerable quantity was lost in the boat that was bilged, and which was the largest of the four, and had their sirdar on board it, who, it is believed, escaped.

List of arms captured.

Fifteen muskets, one bayonet, 130 spears, 95 swords, one swivel gun.

A large quantity of gunpowder, the major part damaged by water.

Some musket ammunition that had been taken from our troops at Ramú

A quantity of musket balls and flints:

Report from Lieutenant G. B. Harrison, to Captain G. Barnes, dated on board the frigate "Hastings," Cheduba Roads, the 10th September 1824.

In pursuance of your orders of this morning, I proceeded with the two cutters under my command in pursuit of four boats belonging to the enemy, as seen from the Hastings, pulling along the Ramree coast to the southward. After a smart pull of about six miles, I had closed with the chase so near as to enable the cutter under the command of Mr. Graves to intercept the two stemmest boats of the enemy, while I myself succeeded in turning the two boats in advance, they then seemed inclined to receive us warmly by giving loud cheers, which were immediately returned by our seamen and marines with their accustomed spirit. A fixe of musketry now commenced on both sides, and the enemy, perceiving our intention of laying them on board, immediately, beached their boats; we pursued so closely as to enable us to do considerable mischief, three boats were captured and towed into deen on the morning of the 16th instant, joined by one hundred sea- . men and marines, and soon after landed in front of a breastwork which had been occupied by the Burmese during the morning, but evacuated immediately on our advancing to attack it. I then pushed on to the stockade described by Lieutenant-Colonel Hampton as being in an unfinished state, but found it completely destroyed, a few sticks only remaining to mark its actual situation. Learning, however, from the guide that there was a fortified village a short distance in front, I proceeded on till we came to a stockade, which we found totally abandoned, although capable of defence against any but a British force without guns As I had the advantage of your valuable services on this as well as on every other occasion during the day, I must request that you will do me the favour to afford Lieutenant-Colonel Hampton any information he may be desirous of obtaining as to the strength of this post, its peculiarity of construction, and the description of buildings within it, this report itself being too unimportant to intrude anything further on the Lieutenant-Colonel's attention than merely to state the nature of the service on which the detachment was employed.

- 2. Conceiving it probable that the Burmese had returned to a stockade which I understood was no great dustance from us, I did not consider it advisable to delay longer than was necessary for the destruction of the buildings in and about that we were in possession of, and after a march of nearly a mile hul the satisfaction to find the guide's information correct, but although inferior to the other only in size, we were allowed to enter this second stockade, as usual, without resistance, the Burmese having fled in all directions on the appearance of the advanced quard.
 - 3. As the abandonment of this last stockade evinced but little inclination on the part of the enemy to afford us an opportunity of doing more in that direction, I thought it advisable, after firing the whole of the bublings (from many of which I had the satisfaction to see large quantities of powder explode), to return to the beach and bivouca near the breastwork we had possessed curselves of on landing I ought to have mentioned before that we were joined in the morning by a party of the Calcutta Militia, doing duty on board the gun-boats; these men were stationed as a picket in rear of the line, the pickets of the regular Native infantry being thrown in directions whence a night attack was more to be apprehended It appears, however, that between three and four in the morning a few of the enemy had the temerity to advance on the sentres, and actually fired amongst them, wounding three privates, and one of them so badly as to render amputation of the right arm necessary. I am happy to add that the picket behaved with the greatest steadiness on this occasion

- 4 Having made a march of about four miles to the northward, where it was reported some large boats were in a creek, and finding only one, which was immediately destroyed, the detach ment returned to the beach and re-embarked on board the boats held in readiness for that purpose
- Although this report has nothing to detail of a brilliant nature, it must nevertheless be gratifying to Lieutenant Colonel Hampton that the conduct of every individual belonging to the detrehment was such as to ensure, on any future occasion of greater difficulty, every possible advantage to which bravery and devotion to its interests can bestow, and though it may be con sidered presumption in me to speak of the ments of any other branch of the service than that to which I immediately belong, I cannot, in the present instance, avoid bringing to the notice of the Lieutenant-Colonel the highly meritorious conduct of the officers seamen and marines of the Hon'ble Company's frigate Hastings and surveying ship Investigator, who noted in conjunc tion with the troops not only as regarded their readiness to meet every obstacle which the nature of the service led us to expect, but likewise in their steady and prompt obedience to the rigid rules of discipline which the peculiar nature of the enterprise rendered so essentially necessary to be observed.

and in the morning disembarked the whole of our force, consist-and myself went on board the Elizabeth, cun-boat, to give such directions as I might think requisite. A smart fire was kept up by the boats on the enemy, who shewed themselves in force and fired smortly on the hoats, but with the exception of one shot from a large iinial that hit the Burrampooter, and a few musket balls that struck the Meana, which was placed by her gallant commander. Mr Boyce, so close to the bank that it was hard to miss her, no accident occurred, the whole of the enemy flying into the jungle as soon as the troops landed leaving their jingals behind them. The position held by the enemy was exceedingly strong and well chosen, being composed of a well-formed breastwork fronting the sea with a nullah of considerable width between it and the high sand-bank forming the shore, the tide flowing into the mullah so that the place was capable of good defence. The rear of the stockade was also intrenched at the distance of about a hundred vards, and that backed by a thick jungle. As the force, about noon, moved off into the interior, and being unable, from my weak state of health, to march with them, I beg leave to give the remaining account of the reconnaissance in the language of my First Lieutenant, who commanded the nautical party on shore,

2. I have much pleasure in mentioning that on the morning of the 16th, Mr. Midshipman Laughton landed about a mile-and-a-half to the south of our first position, and, with the crews of the Burremposter and Irramady, burnt a respectable chouley belonging to the cuenty, who fied on his approach.

I hope this diversion will meet with the approval of the Right Hon'ble Lord Amherst, Governor-General in Council.

were seen in their trenches half a mile to the continuard, but immediately our force was put in motion they disappeared among the jungle, and we then occupied a breastwork guarding the road to the interior, a short half was made for arrangements and the guides to be landed

- At noon we were again put in motion, and commenced our march to the stockades along a narrow pathway admitting in many places only two abreast, and intersected with rivulets. In about twenty minutes we were upon the snot of the expected stockade, but the enemy had previously demolished it, leaving nothing but a few of the large posts standing at its angles and the entranchments not filled up From this place we pushed forward about one mile and a half more and came upon a regular and well constructed stockade capable of containing four thousand men with a double fence round a sand breastwork, and well filled up between with pointed bumboo stakes inclining outwards. I regret to say that Wm Williams, seamon of the Hastings was severely wounded by one of them running into his foot again the enemy fled upon the approach and firing of the light troops in advance when our party triumphantly entered the gates and took possession. A small singal with a pair of colours were taken and the stockade set on fire which consumed the whole of the interior buildings and from the explosion of some concealed powder did damage to the breastwork and outer fences From this we marched on the left and destroyed another large stockade which had no outwork but a breastwork inside the stockade about four fect six inches high and barracks sufficient to contain three thousand men From hence we marched down to the beach and occupied our former position within the breastwork and slept under arms for the night. Here another accident occurred from the going off of a musket which I am very sorry to add severely wounded one of the Investigator s seamen through the arm
- 3 About half past three o clock next moraing we were attack upon our packets. We received them with cheers and overy man was at his post instanter

The enemy, when they found us on the alert and our pickets commenced firing upon them retreated immediately to the woods and nothing more was seen of them. We continued under arms till daylight and then commenced a circutious march of about four miles to the northward and passed three villages in the rear of Umlabeen but as they appeared to be Magh habitations with no work of defence about them they were not destroyed. We thus marched towards the sea and came up in the rear of the breastworks which the figure under your command upon a former occasion, drove the enemy from We proceeded along the beach to the position held by us during the night, where we halted refreshed the men, destroyed the buildings, and embarked the force.

4 I have much pleasure in bringing to your notice the good conduct of the officers and serinen you did me the honour to place under my command, and I feel confident, had the enemy stood, they would have shewn themselves to be British scannen.

Later on more enterprising counsels prevailed, and arrangements were made for the assembly, during the ensuing cold season, of a force at Chittagong,* to move southward from that place, clear Arakan of the enemy, and oventually cross the mountain range which separates that province from Ava Proper, holding out a hand to Sir Arr hibald Campbell on his advancing up the line of the Irrawali, and aiding hou in his movement on the enemy's capital.

Orders for the assembly of the force were given in September 1824, but it was the end of December before the last of the troops warned for this service had reached the appointed renderyous.

It was in connection with these movements that the well-known Barrackpore mutiny occurred. Amongst the corps warned for service in Arakan were the 26th (late the 1st Battalion of the 13th), the 47th (late 1st Battahon 21th), and the 62nd (late 2nd Battalion 31st) Regiments of Bengal Native Infantry, all then stationed at Barrackpore These corps took no pains to concerl their aversion to the service for which they had been detailed; the Ramú disaster had impressed them with an unreasonable and unreasoning - dicad of the prowess of the Burmese, whom they regarded as magicians possessing the power of lendering themselves invisible and invulnerable. They had also heard rumours of the unhealthiness of the climate of Arakan, and above all, believing it impossible to reach that country by land, there was ever present to them the belief that they would be forced on board ship, which to a Bengal sepoy, for reasons which have already been mentioned, was an idea which embraced all that was dreadful. all that was contaminating. In addition to these imaginary evils, there unfortunately existed a real and substantial ground of dissatisfaction in the difficulty of procuring the carriage necessary for the transport of the baggage, which, according to the then universal custom in Bengal, the sepoy was expected to provide for lumself out of an allowance given for that purpose. The British officers of the three regiments, at their own expense, collected a portion of the baggage nounals required, and an advance of money was made to the men to enable them to purchase the remainder; but the animals were not to be had, and the advance of money was therefore useless.

In the midst of the general dissatisfaction which prevailed, the 47th, the regiment under orders to move first, was ordered, on the 1st November 1821, to parade for the march. This was all that was required to fan the smouldering fire of discontent into the active flames of mutiny, and, with the exception of about a hundred men, the regiment refused to move a step from Barrack. pore unless their pay were increased and carriage supplied by the Government. All attempts to soothe the excited feelings of the men proved fruitless. There was no alternative left to the military authorities but to put down the mutiny by force, and accordingly Her Majesty's 1st and 47th Regiments of Foot, a troop of Bengal Horse Artillery and a nortion of the Governor-General's Body-Guard, accompanied by the Commanderin-Chief (General Sir Edward Paget) himself, were moved up at once to Barrackpore, from Calcutta and Dum-Dum. On the morning of the 2nd November these troops were drawn up on the parade ground at Barrack- . pore, facing the mutinous regiment and the other two Native corps under orders for Arakan, small portions of which had also joined the 47th. A final attempt was then made to bring the mutineers to reason. but they were stubborn, and at last the guns of the horse artillery were ordered to open upon them. At the first discharge the mutineers broke and fled, pursued by the Body-Guard, who cut up many of them, while numbers were drowned in the attempt to escape across the Hughli by swimming. Most of the fugitives were made prisoners within a few hours, and a general court-martial condemned many to death; not more than a dozen executions, however, took place, the sentences in most cases having been commuted to hard labour on the reads, in irons, for various periods. The number of the regi-ment was effaced from the Army List, and remained vacant for several years,*

^{*} To replace the 47th, a new regiment was immediately raised, and numbered the 63th. In 1829, this regiment was brought into the vacant place in the line, and as the 47th Rengal Nativer Inflating, did excellent service during the Sottley campuge, and afforwards in Burnah; and it remained fastful during the outbreks of 1857. It is till exits as the 7th Rengal Nativer Inflating, and lately rendered good service. For the Coll. The Coll. Nativer Inflating which mattered at Mooltan in 1878 was raised in 1823 as the 18 Exits Represent.

The prompt and vigorous measures of repression adopted produced a salutary effect; and the chief difficulty, that of the provision of adequate carriage, having been overcome, the disinclination of the remaining regiments to proceed on service to Arakan, however deeply it may still have been felt, was no longer openly expressed, and within a few days after the mutiny the 26th and 62nd marched for Chittagong.

At this place arrangements for the expedition had been progressing actively, but, as before remarked, it was the end of December 1824 before the troops had assembled and all was in readiness for an advance to

of the following month, with the force under his command, he reached the Naf river, forming the boundary between Chittagong and Arakan. A detachment was immediately crossed over, and occupied the post of Mangdi, from which the Burmese garrison fled on their approach. Several days were consumed in getting the rest of the force over the river, and it was the 12th of the month before a further advance from Mangdú could be made. At this point the 51th Toot, the 10th and a wing of the 16th Madras Native Infantry were put on board some of the gun-boats to proceed by sea, while the 44th Foot, four companies of the 42nd and five of the 62nd Bengal Native Infintry, with a battery of artillery, two ressallahs of the 2nd Local Horse, the 2nd Light Infantry Battalion and the other wing of the 16th Madras Native Infantry continued the route by land. The rest of the troops were left at Mangda under Brigadier Richards, to see a supply convoy over the Naf and bring it on to head-quarters. The bulk of the naval force under Commodore Hayes proceeded direct to the mouth of the Oratung river.

Owing to the gun-boats with the 51th Toot and the Madras sepoys on beard having to put back to Mangdi in consequence of a violent storm, it was the 27th of Yebraury before the whole of the force was assembled on the banks of the Myn, a large river about five marches south of the Naf. In the meantime the marine force had met with a check in an attack on the stockades of Kiangpala in the Arakan river on the 28rd of Tebruary. The particulars of thus affair are related in the following desnatch from Commodore Hayes —

Extract of a letter from Commodore J Hayes, Commanding the Flottla, to the Hittary Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, dated on board the "Escarch," off Oristong Pagoda, the 25th February 1825

I am to state, for His Excellency's information, that I left Mangdid on the 16th instant under an understanding with General Morrison that I was to take on the major part of the flee to the Arakan river with General Machean and Degades Fair at the hand of His Majesty's 5th the Madrias 10th and left winy of the 16th Native Infantry, with half the gun-boats, leaving Captain Crawford with the other half and Mugh boats to join General Morrison on the Myou, who was proceeding to its entrance with the main body of the arms.

On the morning of the 17th we cleared the Naf to join the transport ships destined to convey the advance brigade above mentioned to Arakan, but at 1 r M a violent storm commenced from the northward, which continued round the compass till the morning of the 19th, and prevented the embarkation of the troops in question Being thus unfortunately disappointed, and feeling anxious for the safety of our small

Aners ur, Plate, Thames, Ana squadron of vessels sent to explore the entrances of the Myou

plore the entrances of the Myou and Arakan rivers (in communication with General Morrison) on the 10th instant, I consequently proceeded in quest of them with the Research, Vestal, Helen Trusty, Osmey and Gunga Saugon, armad vessels, the Isabella and Asia Feliz transports and the commissional sloops, leaving Captain Crawford to follow with the

Stugor and Vestil, the headmost vessels. When the Research Lot within half mistel shot we commenced a heavy cannonale and steady fire of musketrs upon the stockade and breastwork which was treturned by the enemy with great regularity and spirit this musketes in particular being tenfold that of our whole force) On ringing to the northern end of the stockade, with intent to anchor and tlank it as well as allow the other vessels toom to come into action we found ourselves raked from forward by another stronger batters and stockade which we had no idea of nor were the latter works known to our informants -(which may be the case considering the rapidity with which the Burmese throw up their works of defence, I am not inclined to impute trackery to our informants although it is difficult to suppose them ignorant of such important worls) Finding my self disal pointed and our best men falling fist, wore round and ranged up again from the southward in like manner as before covered the other vessels engaged, and ordered them off After a severe conflict of two hours duration seeing that any further contest was n useless waste of the lives of my brave companions (as we neither had men enough to keep the place if taken nor sufficient means to land them with effect owing to the absence of the Pluto steam gun vessel upon which I had calculated to land one hur dred men on the beach under her commanding battery), having seen the whole clear wore round again, on hauling to the wind grounded about half a mile from the stockade as did the Asserghus and Asia Felix transport, the Isabell's transport having grounded previously did not join in the action The con test terminated about o P M and although the tessels mentioned remained in the position they grounded in until 3 A W next morn ing, the enemy did not attempt to fire at any of them which shows the crippled state he was reduced to better than any other comment in fact the river part of the southern stockade and brenetwork was completely battered down and the works deserted by the enemy who retreated into his other stronger lolds so that our possession of the deserted one would have availed us nothing as we could not have maintained it with our small force and left the vessels capable of defence

I grove to state in the first instance the premature fate of my valued fixed Major Schalch, he was mortally wounded by my sile on the front part of the peop and fell into my arms, he lingered in first agony intil half past three o clock this morning when his gallant spirit field for ever In the next place I am to lament the loss of Mr Rogers second officer of the Research (formerly second effect of the Asia free trader). The other lamented discists are detailed in the casualty reports herewith submitted for His Excel le, cy a information the whole of which were occasioned by the cump's nucleit; although he fired from several pieces of ordanace and numerous jinjals To account for our loss, I need only add that the river part of the Burnese works is not more thru musket range across and that the Research was never without pistol shot while in action with the enemy on the 25rd instant.

I am impelled, by a sense of common justice due to the troops to express my admiration of the steady and gallant conduct of His Majestys 54th, the details of the Madras 10th and 16th Native Infantry, the 11th Bombay Native Infantry,* and Calcutta Minitiat present on the occasion, and I humbly presume to recommend Capitains Grindley and Tolson and the officers under their command to His Excellency is consideration Lacutenant Coote, of His Majesty is 54th, fought by my side, and a more gallant officer I have never seen in action. The gun boats were admirably served, and exceeded my expectation, as did the Trusty and Asia Felix, transports. All the officers and men of the larger vessels of war did justice to the high character I had previously formed of them, and every effort which can be drawn from courage zeal and fidelity may be confidently expected from the whole on the most arduous service hereafter.

In conclusion although we have not effected our object we have gained a complete knowledge of the invigation of the river more than half way to Arakan and ascertained the best mode of capturing Chamballa and the booty it contains. Whenever the althance brigade joins us and co operates by land perhaps our misfortune may prove the means of inducing the enemy to risk a further contest when so reinforced and terminate the Aral an conquest as the place in question is said to be of more importance going further, that in two or three days we should return with a sufficient force and take Chamballa, that I merely came to Ornatong for water, &c., for the troops and vessels, which was indispensable for our further proceedings, that if the vessels had been supplied, I would not have lost sight of Chamballa for a moment. We are now only four short revches from it (none of them three nules in extent), at the most commanding station of the river, the creek close to us, to the westward runs into the Myon near the General's head quarters, we completely cover the Arakan river, from its entrance to this station, and alike intercept all communication from the northward

In concluding the casualty reports, I am to bring to His Excellency's particular notice the very gallant conduct of the following officers, viz Mr Royce, commanding the Trusty and Captain Jellicoe, of the Asia Felix transport who remained at anchor with their vessels off Chamballa a considerable time I am more indebted to Captain Jellicoe than any other person, as I had no reasonable pretension to expect such assistance from him With regard to Mr Royce the case is different I expected much able aid from him in consequence of his established character for undounted courage and zeal in the service Mi Kent command ing the Thames first class gun boat, greatly distinguished himself as did Mr Charles Ramsay Richardson in the Africa Mr Charles Montrion in the Gunga Saugar Charles Avery (boatswain's mate) of the Asia gun boat and Mr Oakshot (gunner), in charge of the Osprey, gun pinnace. The whole of the crews of the vessels just mentioned are equally entitled to the most favourable notice of His Excellency In consequence of the loss of the second officer of the flag ship I have been enabled to promote Mesers Richardson and Montriou to the situations of second and third officers of the Honble Company's ship Research as a just reward for their gallant conduct on the occasion in question and trust such proceeding will meet His Excellency's approbation

It was the 20th of March before General Morrison had got his forces across the Myu liver, and assembled them at Chrukiam, picepratory to a movement on Arakan, the chief town of the province. On that diy a portion of the force was pushed forward to Kiy krang dong and Natonguay on the Arakan river. On the 24th a further advance up the eastern bank of the river was made, and the camp was formed on the southern bank of the Chabatti Nullah. The subsequent movements, the operations on the Padho hills and at Mahatti, and the capture of Arakan are described in the following papers.

Letter from Mayor W L Watson Deputy Adjutant General of the Army to G Suinton Leg Secretary to Government Political Department dated Fort William the 14th April 1825

I have the honour by direction of the Commander in Chief transmit in original a despatch this day received from Briga dier General Morrison on commanding the South Lastern Divi sion dated 2nd April announcing the capture of Arakan after a succession of the most brilliant operations against the enemy

CAMP ARAKAN tle 2nd April 1825

Sir

The Almighty has been pleased to permit that the exertions of the South Eastern Division of the Army should be crowned with complete success. Arakan was jesterday taken and the tin thousan I men that acted under Atmon Mangra have as a mitarry body been uverly annihilated. The proceedings that have led to the sresult I shall now have the homour to detail for the information of the Commander in Chief.

- 2 On the 24th ultime the arrangements for the movement of the force from the camps on the Ooratung were completed and the head quarters of the division were established with the 2nd Brigade in advance at Chabattee Bheong within two nules of the enemy s position in the Padha hills the march of the remander being directed as pointed out in enclosure No. 1
- 3 On the 25th ultime boot and pontoon bridges were thrown across the Chabattee and Wabraing rivers and in the exeming a recommassance was made to ascertain the position of the passes through the hills and the obstacles to be encountered. The natural ones were considerable arising principally from the steepness of the ascents and from the course of deep tide nullulas.

by daybreak and were formed into four columns The right as per margin and centre columns then advanced to force the two ascertained passes while the left with the gun boats under Captain Crawford Hon ble Company s Marine was to have ascended the river which appeared to flow through the hills The boats however having grounded on a short Can tam Leshe landed his men and was then directed to slirt the river and if pos sible to pass by the extreme right of the first range of I ills with a view of attack ing the enemy from their or of intercepting

3 The centre column hal not proceeded far ere the toesin of alarm and shouts from the hills gave notice where they were occupied and that the enemy were in force

The advance consisting of the light infinity companies of the 26th 28th * 49th and 63rd * Regiments under the command of Cujtum Mason 49th Regiment was directed to gain the

[.] These two compan es belonged to the 2nd Light Infantry Fattabon

- 8. On the 27th, when the fog dispersed, the order of advance was resumed, and Major Carter, His Majesty's 44th Regiment, with three companies of that corps, covered by the light infantry company of His Majesty's 54th Regiment, was directed to carry a small hill in front of the enemy's works, while the remainder of the force moved forward in column, at quarter distance, with the artillery on the reverse flank.
 - 9 The enemy's position was well chosen, being situated on a peninsula, protected by a broad river whose fords are only passable at nearly low water, and whose banks are not only steep, but were covered with sharp stakes. Their defences consisted of deep entrenchments along the margin, with epaulements left to protect them from an enflading fire, in the rear, high conical hills, surmounted by pagedas and surrounded by entrenchments, served as numerous citadels, and appeared to be occupied as such.
 - 10. On the advance of the party under Major Carter, the enemy that occupied the hill retired across the river, when a fire from those parts of their works that commanded it was immediate. ly opened, four twelve-pounders, two five-and a-half-inch-howitzers, and two six-pounders were placed in position, while the first brigade was moved to the right to attack a column that appeared in that direction, and which I now judge to have been an intended reinforcement; it did not, however, long remain in sight, or reach Mahattee The fire of the artillery soon silesced the enemy's, and checked the effective fire of their musketry, and as the fords were then passable, the 2nd Brigade took ground to the left, in order to cross to the right of the enemy's defences. The 1st Brigade and two resadahs of horse were at the same time moved forward, the reserve (formed, as on the preceding day, with the addition of three companies of the 2nd Light Infantry Battalion and the rifle company of the Mugh Levy) following,
 - 11. On the 2nd Brigado descending into the river, the enemy abendened their post, while the troops on the right (the situation of the ford having been ascertained) crossed, but from the steepness of the bank on the opposite side, had great difficulty in entering the works. A ressalah of horse, with the rifle company of the Mugh Levy, were pushed over still further to our right to gain'the road by which the enemy were retreating, and arrived in time to do some execution among their rear, and to prevent the destruction of bridges on the road to Arakan
 - 12 I have omitted to mention that during the commencement of the action (which lasted about two hours) I received the pleasing intelligence of the near approach of Brigadier-General Machean with the 5th Brigade,

- 13 On the 29th it was necessary to halt to obtain information, and allow of a junction being formed of the troops still in the rear end by the flotilla under Commodore Hayes who was in progress for that purpose In the evening this was effected and the enemys position partly recompostred
- 14 On the 29th the division moved forward at daylight The advance under Brigadier General Macbean consisted of one 168 salah of horse, two six pounders two howitzers the 5th Brigade six companies of His Majesty s 54th Regiment the 2nd Light Infantry Battalion the rifle company of the Mugh Levy, one company of regular pioneers one company of Mugh Pioneers and sixteen scaling ladders Considerable delay was occasioned by fog which at first prevented the great strength of the enemy's position from being discovered. It occupied a range of connected hills (since ascertained to be from three hundred and fifty to four hundred and fifty feet in height), strong by nature but rendered still more so by art escarpment abatis and masonry having been resorted to where those means could be most efficaciously employed One pass alone leads through them to the capital, and that was defended by the fire of several pieces of artillery and about three thousand muskets, the whole number of the enemy ranged along the heights may be estimated at from eight thousand to nino thousand men, the ground in front is an extensive valley entirely clear of jungle but in depth not altogether out of the range of the enemy sartillery
- Where the advance halted it was partly covered by a tank and Brigadier General Macbean made a disposition for acouring the principal hills in the first range at the commencement of the pass Four pieces of artillery were ordered forward to cover the attack and the troops for the assault consisting of the light infantry company of His Majesty's 54th Regiment four companies of the 2nd Light Infantry Battalion and the light infantry companies of the 10th and 16th Regiments of Madras Native Infantry with the rifle company of the Mugh Lery were placed under Major Lemm, a support of six companies of the 16th Regi ment Madras Native Infantry under Captain French of that corps, followed. The assault commenced and in spite of a well directed fire and of the steepness of the ascent which was occasionally nearly perpendicular many gained the summit Lieutenant Clark Aide de Camp to Brigadur Gene--ral Macbean with several of the light infantry company of His Majesty s 54th Regiment got their hands on the trench but even with the assistance such a hold afford d were unable to maintain their ground large stones were rolled on them and smaller ones were discharged from bows, the consequence was they were precipitated to the bottom. In this attempt the efforts were persevered in till every officer was wounded

- 16 I cannot here avoid interrupting the detail to make known to His Excellency that on no occasion could British gallantry be more conspicuously displayed, the conduct of the officers was emulated by the men and European and Native troops yield with each other to equal the example set.
- 17 The guns in the ardour of the moment had been advanced by Captain Lamb who commanded them so far that on the retreat of the troops they became too exposed to be longer served and the retrings of them at the time was impracticable without the hizard of sacrificing the men who would have been obliged to effect it by the drag ropes
 - 18 While the attack was being carried on at the pass the right of the enems position was cannonaded but without any apparent effect, the twelve pounders and heavy howsteers were afterwards moved to play upon the works at the pass the fire was continued for an hour, but it appearing to be but a uscless waste of ammunition I caused it to be discontinued and those guns to be withdrawn. At the same time an encampiaent was marked out the tents were pitched, and at one oclock the troops fell back upon them with the exception of the advance which was continued during the day in the position they occupied, in the dusk of the evening the wounded were brought off the guns withdrawn and the whole retired without firther loss though during the day a heavy cannonade which had the effect of checking the enemy s fire though it was not entirely silenced

when the Brigadier summit advanced to the assault enemy did not stand advantage was taken of the panic of the moment the detachment under had the opportunity of putting themselves more conspicuously forward, I own myself incompetent, and I must trust to His Excellency's discernment to appreciate how truly a claim to his approbation has been perfected by the division, more from his knowledge of what they have had to encounter than from any representation I am able to make.

- 24. The Political Agent, T. C. Robertson, Esq., not only previous to the force quitting Chittagong, but to the present period, has been zealously and indefatigably engaged in rendering every assistance that the civil power could command; his arrangements on all occasions have tended to the advantage of the whole, and to the accommodation of individuals; and I truly rejoice at this opportunity of publicly acknowledging that the greatest benefit has been derived from his presence.
 - 25 Commodore Hayes has, on all occasions, rendered an aid the most effectual, and had it not been for the assistance afforded by the flottill under his command, the arrival of the force before Arakan would have been almost impracticable. Every exertion was made by him to co operate, and when insurmountable obstacles prevented the further approach of the gun-boats to the scene of action, dragged them and their appurtenances a distance of five miles to the encampment before Arakan, rendering them available for any service on which they could be usefully employed.
 - 26. Brigaduer-General Macbean gave me the benefit of his judgment and experience, and the effectual aid of his directing superintendence. To offer a further remark on the known zeal of one who has so firmly established his claim to honourable fume would, I fear, in me be but an assumption, to His Excellency the claims of Brigadier-General Macbean are fully known.
 - 27. The assiduty and attention of Brigadier Grant, C.B., commanding the 2nd Brigade, of Brigadier Richards, commanding the 5th Brigade, and of Lieutenant-Colonel Lindsay, commanding the Artillery Division, demand that I should state to His Excellency that their example and their directions materially contributed to the success of our operations.
 - 28. Did the limits of a despatch allow of my mentioning separately the officers who commanded corps, I should feel myself most particularly bound to name them, and proud should I be in being the instrument of more especially recording their descrits than, while be ring testimony to the merits of all, in saying that every officer, non-commissioned officer and private performed his duty, equally by gullutry in the field and by the willing endurance of privations that the division might more forward.

for any mark of approbation, and I can confidently assert that both from talent and education he promises to prove a credit to the profession.

- 33. Enclosed are returns of the casualties that have curred during the several actions with the enemy since the division entered Arakan, and also of the ordnance found in position on the east front of the heights covering the capital; the quantity captured is so widely dispersed, that there has not yet been time to allow of its being ascertained.
- 34. Several sirilars have surrendered themselves, and prisoners are hourly being brought to the camp. Grounding my opinion on the general assertions of the expires, I may venture to suggest the probability that not one thousand of the Burmeso who were serving under Atwoon Mangza will reach Ava, but by the permission of the Governor-General.

The following are the arrangements for the advance of the force:-

Head-quarters to be established this evening on the south' bank of the Chabattee river.

To march at daylight to-morrow morning for the same place-

Four ressalahs of the 2nd Local Horse, Artillery Division head-quarters, with four twelve-pounders, two five-and-a-half-inch howitzers, and two six-pounders.

1st Brigade Native troops.

Rifle Company of the Magh Levy.

To embark at 6 A M, for the same destination-

Five companies of His Majesty's 44th Regiment,—on board the gun-boats that will be appropriated for their conveyance, and proceed to the Chabattee river, where they will land and join the 1st Brigade. Horses and cattle belonging to the officers to be crossed to the camp of Kay-krang-dung this evening, and proceed with the column of march to-morrow.

on Saturday, the 26th instant, the 5th Brigade to more to Kay-krang-ding, under the arrangements communicated esterday, as for to-morrow, by the Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General On Sunday, the 27th instant, four companies of His Majesty's 44th Regiment.

Four companies of the 2nd Light Infantry Battalion are to cross to Kay-Krang-ding under directions that will be issued by Brigadier-General Macbean, who will be pleased to effect a junction of his column with the advance column when the arrival of the commissariat cattle will permit him to move forward.

The troops, when leaving their present encampment, are to be supplied with two days' provisions.

From Brigadier W. Richards, Commanding 1st Brigade, to. Captain W. B. Scott, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, dated the 1st April 1825.

I have the bonour to report to you, for the information of Brigadier-General Morrison, e.n. commanding the South-Eastern Division, that the storming party he did me the knower of entrusting to my charge preterday evening completely succeeded in effecting the object degreed, with the hoponst, and without the loss of a man; and that after the junction of the remainder of my brigade with the two six-pounders, I made my arrangements for prosecuting the success I had obtained last night, the result of which is well known to the Brigadier-General.

- 2. In making this report I cannot refrain from expressing my sincere thanks to every officer and man, both European and Native, engaged under my orders, for the spirit and gallantry they displayed. And I feel it my duty to state that I received every assistance from my Brigado-Major, Captain Fernie, and from the active exertions of Captain Hugh Gordon, who volunteered to accompany me.
- 3. I cannot close this letter without stating my high sense of gratitude to Lieutenant Wroughton, of the Surveying Department, who accompanied me for the purpose of pointing out the road, for the judgment and ability with which he executed the difficult task of leading my advance to the point of attack, to which I chiefly attribute my having so completely succeeded in gaining possession of such a very strong post (the key of the enemy's position) without any loss.

From Brigadier W. Richards, Commanding 1st Brigade, to Captain W. B. Scott, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, dated the 1st April 1825.

- I deem it my duty to bring to the notice of Brigadier-General Morrison, C.n., commanding the South-Eastern Division, the very gallant conduct of a havildar of the light company of the 20th Regiment, Native Infantry, by name Sammar Sing, who was one among the very first of those who entered the enemy's stochade yesterday evening, and who by displaying an example of coolness to those who followed him clearly shewed what a noble wcapon of offence the bayonet is when wickled by a resolute and determined solder.
 - 2. In mentioning the gallant conduct of an individual of the 26th Regiment, Native Infantry, I cannot refrain from stating that the corps altogether has been, ever since it has been employed on the present service, most exemplary in every respect, whether it regards their gallantry, descipline and steadmess in the field, or their patient endurance of privations, to which such a service as the one they have been engaged in has called on them to endure. I therefore trust that the Brigadier-General will do me the honour of bringing these circumstances to the notice of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that the impression which may have been attached to the name of the regiment in consequence of the participation of some few dissolute characters in the unfortunate mutiny of the late 47th Regiment at Barrack pore may be removed.

From Commodore J Hayes Commanding the Flottlla to Captain F Champagné Military Scretar, to His Excel lency the Commander in Chief Fort William dated Anakan et e 2nd Amril 1820.

I am to request that you will inform His Excellency that on the 20th March at Kay krang ding the following final arrange ments were made by General Morrison and myself for the disposal of the flotilla in the projected attack of the enemy s capital wife

- Under Mr Higgins the Helen and Trust , armed versels with half the 5th Division of gun boats were stationed at the southern part of Chamballa (or Kiang Pela) reach to support the troops left in possession of Hancarrah or Chanerain island and even tually to take rossession of Chamballa stockades on the enemy s moving towards Arakan. The Soplia armed brig with the other half of the 5th Division of gun boats were left to support the detal of troops left at Kay krang dig and to protect the transports. The 8th Division of gun boats and the I luto steam cun vessel were stationed under Captain Crawford in advance with Brigadier Grant. The 1st and 7th Divisions of gun boats under my personal command with the Research Asserguri Isabella Brougham Goli il Jessy and four commissariat sloops with the guns ammunition provisions &c were destined to proceed into the Mongre and form a junction with the army at Mahattee near the capital
- Mr Higgins commanding the detachment of the flottill in Chamballa reach stating that the enemy had evaluated the stockades and that he had agreeably to my order taken possession of the same and awaited my further commands in consequence of which informat on I directed that the Sopil is and gun busts at kay krang ding should immediately join Mr. If ggins and instructed the latter officer to proceed with the whole detach ment up the Chamballa reach to Arakan and cause a diversion in thirt quarter making every possible impression upon if e enemy in 1s power without losing, the vessels under his command afternoon of the 28th. Having communicated with General Morrison and ascertained that the gun boats could not approach the capital within range of their guns it was determined that the seamen and marines combined should land and act with the army taking with them two twenty four pounder carronades and requisite ammunition The General proposing to make a prelimi nary attack upon Arakan fort early next morning and that I should tom the camp as above stated I accordingly landed two twenty four pounders and put myself at the head of seventy flotilla seamen besides officers and warrant officers together with the crews of the gun boats present, amounting in all to 250 men We succeeded by great exertion in dragging the guns and carry ing the shot and ammunition on the men's shoulders to the camps whereat we arrived 7 PM on the 29th ultimo Captain Crawford being previously detached with the 8th Division of gun boats to endeavour to approach Arakan by a channel between Mahattee and the Chamballa reach Perhaps it is here necessary to observe that the gun boats brought up the mortare howitzers and two twenty four pounder field guns with all their requisites to Mahattee

5 On the 31st General Mornson having determined to carry the heights commanding Araban I firmshed at his request the following details from the flotilla for the occasion viz.—

For the advance attack under Brigadier Richards.—Laentenant Armstrong Mir Howard Mir Montriou Mir Keymer two warrant officers and thirty scamen for the support of the same under Brigadier General Machean—Captain Crawford the Commander of the Assergurh Acting Lieutenant Richardson Mir Pruen Mir Jackson four warrant officers and forty seamen myself to accompany the General Commanding in Chief with the main body of the army Upon this subject I have only to add that the advance columns under Brigadier Richards were completely successful and covered themselves with glory and that I have every reason to be proud of the gallantry and good conduct of every officer and maa under my commond with the Arnkan army Lieutenant Armstrong has invariably distinguished him self ever su ce the flottill left Cox 8 Bazar

P S-I rejoice to say that we hall only one man slightly wounded with the advance at the capture of Araban.

Extract from a despatch from Brigadier-General J. W. Morrison, Commanding the South-Eastern Division, to Major W. L. Watson, Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army, dated Cump Arracan, the 9th April 1825.

Since my despatch of the 2nd instant, nothing of any moment has occurred. Parties were sent in pursuit of the flying foe, they overtook hundreds of stragglers, but (with one exception) failed in encountering any collected number; that exception obtained in the matance of a body of the enemy, amounting to about three hundred men, who, attempting to make their escape across the plain were pursued by a ressalah of the 2nd Local Horse under Lieutenant Maclean and were accounted for as killed prisoners or drowned in the river which they had to pass in order to reach the road leading to Talah

- 2. I have as yet been unable to obtain any positive informa tion as to what has become of the dispersed force, a large propor tion who had families in the country are represented to have embodied themselves in the population while others are stated to be wandering in the jungles and others again to have by a cir custous route gained the road to Talak which place many of the serdars were endeavouring to reach by unfrequented paths through the mountains
- The views that led to the attacking of the enemy on the eastern side are proved to have been justly founded though the ol act has not been entirely completed -the intercepting their return to Ava. It is however nearly certain that they have not been able to re assemble in any force and I still hope the measures that have been adopted and proposed to be pursued will yet enable me satisfactorily to account for the fugitives

Chynda on the main land

While the operations under General Morrison were in progress another attack on the island of Ramri had been made by Colonel Hampton, 40th Bengal Native Infantry, who was in command of the British forces occupying Cheduba This was on the 3rd Tebruary 182a

Despatel from Lieutenant Colonel R. Himiton Comman ling at Cle lub t to Lieuten int Colonel J Aicol A ljutant General of the Arms datel Chelul the 8th Feb

Captain Hardy commanding the Honble Company & frigate H at ngs * I wing sent me two Burriese prisoners taken on "Captain Barnes who preriously command of the Hestings ded in Nov mber 1821

Ramree island on the 22nd nlmo by a party sent on shore from that vessel and having from those individuals obtuned what I considered sufficient information regarding its localities defines and means of resistance as to justify my making a descent on the island with a new to its capture I addressed him on the subject stating that if he would make arrangements for the transportation of part of the force under my command I should be most happy to join him (Captain Hard) being at this time most actively employed in surveying and reconnotiting the har bour and creek of Ramree) and had not the least doubt, provided the information proved correct that with his cordial co-operation and assistance we should neither find much difficulty nor trouble in accomplishing the object

- 2 Captain Hardy came over to Cheduba on the 27th and after a short consultation (although he was of opinion that our European force was not sufficient jet he was unwilling to throw any obstacle in the way) the business was determined on
- 3 By 5 P M on the 29th the detrehment detailed in the Forty eight artiller; men with two brigides of gues the free burdered and twenty men of the the armed brig Planet and the 40th Reg ment, Na ve infantry in the immed and 2 mg and a the bright having got the artillery on board sailed that afternoon and on the following morning the remainder of the vessels got under weigh, but from light and variable winds and the intricacy of the entrance into Ramree harbour we did not reach the mouth of the creek until the morning of the 2nd instruit.

- 4 At 1 PM. Captain Hardy accompanied by Major Murray Captain Hall commanding the artillery and my detachment staff Lieutenaut Margrave went for the purpose of exumining the localities of the creek and to ascertain the landing place which hald been pointed out by one of the guides. About 5 P M the party returned and reported that the plain pointed out appeared a favourable spot for landing at high water and just above it the creek was strongly staked across About three hundred yards further up the creek there was a second row of stakes much stronger and defended by a battery from which the enemy opened a heavy but ill directed fire upon the boats from juny ils and musketty. About half a mile up the creek beyond the second row of stakes the angle of a stockade was visible
 - Arrangements being made for landing the troops as early in the morning as possible to benefit by the flood tude th distance from the vessels to the landing place being all of four miles by half past 9 AM, nearly the whole force was landed without opposition.

6 I immediately formed a column of the strength specified able Captain Hardy to proceed up with gun boats to remove the stakes and to accompany the troops to the principal stockade leaving Captain Skardon with the reserve of about one hundred and eighty men and the two brigades of guns under Captain Hall to act in concert with Captain Hardy as circumstances might render it necessary

7 The column of attack I regret to say was led by the gundes in quite a different direction to the place I wished to carry, and had to surmount obstacles never contemplated from the information received. The gallantry of the party however overcame every difficulty which presented itself and drove the enemy out from all his intrenched positions at the point of the bayonet obliging him to take shelter in his usual place of resort, the jungle from which a galling fire was kept up until he was dis lodged by our troops.

8 It being now half past 3 PM the detachment quite fatigued and exhausted for wint of water and finding it was totally impracticable to advance by the road pointed out the jungle being so very close as not to admit a file of men abreast, and lined by the enemy who had now opened a fire upon our iear (we were about five miles distant from the beats without any possibility of communication) and it appearing evident that we had been most treacherously decrived it was deemed prudent time to recross the null d's which had so graftly impeded our advances.

utmost importance should Government deem it expedient here after to send an adequate force to take possession of and occupy it.

- 11 From my own personal observation if I may be permitted to offer an opinion the island is particularly strong, and from the localities of the country its natural defences and means of resist ance it will require a force of at least fifteen hundred or two thousand men including five hundred Luropean troops with a due proportion of artillery and pioneers to take and muintain it
 - 12 When every man composing the force did his duty it is difficult to discriminate individual ment but I should consider myself wanting in duty were I not to bring to the notice of His Excellency the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Bell of the Bom bay European Regiment communding the marines and of Lieu tenant Coxe commanding the light company of my own regiment who were conspicuously forward on every occasion shewing an example to their men which did them honour and credit
 - 13 To Captain Hardy who commanded the naval part of the force, and who was engaged with the gun boats during my ab sence endeavouring to remove the stakes and force a passage up the creek to the enemy's breastworks and whose officers and examen exerted themselves to their utmost my sincere and grate ful thanks are due as well as for his cordial co operation and assistance on every occasion wherever the public service required it.
 - 14 Herewith I do myself the honour to enclose a return of killed and wounded

Report from Captain Hardy to Commodore Hayes dated from on board the frigate Hastings Ramree Harbour the 5th February 1825

The Henry Meriton has been detailed to convey to you and General Morrison the result of the operations against Ramree which I repret to state have failed from causes which Licentenant Colonel Hampton will more properly explain. I am happy to say the Licentenant-Colonel speaks in high terms of the good conduct and bravery of our seamen and marines, and I beg to recommend all the officers under my command to the notice of Government as decrying every praise for their exertions and valour on every occasion.

2 Previous to this attack with the military we had with a party of scamen and mainness under Lieutenant Wyndham several skirmishes with the enemy and had succeeded in defeating them in two successive attacks and in taking and burning two of their villages strongly defended by five hundred men sent from Ramree for the purpose; two privoners were taken one of them a chicfiain that commanded the party. I am sorry to add that Ihomas Power a manne was senously wounded on one of these occasions but is getting better I reconnoited the creek under a smart fire and give the I reutenant Colonel the result of all my observations and also every professional information connected with the service. Inclosed is a return of our killed and wounded, our boats suffered from the enemy schot.

- l I further beg to acquaint you that the ships and vessels under my orders at Cheduba have been actively employed on the enemy s clasts and possessions since I took command
- 4 The sergernt and six privates of His Majesty's 54th Regiment on board the Honble Company's armed cutter Matches for their health volunteered to serve on this occasion with our narmes under Lieutenant Bell and they are of course included in the Lieutenant Colonel's detachment orders and letters of thanks copies of which I forward for your information and beg to add my testimony to that of the Lieutenant Colonel in favour of Lieutenant Bell I regret to say one of them fell and one was slightly wounded the others I would forward in the Henry Meriton but they have expressed a wish to remain until their commides are well. I have consented to their application as we are all under orders for Arakan
- 5 The cutter Matel less is now going into Cheduba creek to undergo repairs and caulking after which I intend examining Chandowah and some of the creeks on the eastern side of Ramires channel that are said to lead into the Irrawaddy unless called up to Arkab.
- 6 B₂ this opportunity I have the pleasure to forward to you a plan of Ramree channel creek and harbor as surveyed by m₂ orders by Lieutenants Wyndham and Harnson assisted by Mr Carless masters mate of this ship and beg to recommend those officers to your consideration as deserving notice

In pursuance of his plan of clearing the whole of Arakan of the Burmese troops, General Morrison, as soon as he had driven the enemy from the capital of the province, determined on another attempt to turn the enemy out of Ramri, and, as remarked in the last paragraph of his despatch of the 9th April, on the preceding day Bugadier-General Macbean had started with a strong force on this expedition

The following reports from General Machean describe the reduction of Ramri and the subsequent occupation of Sandoway (Chainda) -

Despatch from Brigadier General J W Morrison C.B., Commanding the South Eastern Division to the Adjutant-General of the Army dated Arakan the 10th May 1825

I have the honour to inclose, in original, two despatches just received from Brigadier General Macbean -one dated 23rd April. announcing the occupation of the island of Ramree, and the other, the 5th May that of Sandoway on the main

Irom both places the enemy timely retreated and though they did not afford an opportunity for the display of British valour His Excelleticy will be gratified in learning that on both occasions such ardour was displayed as gave assurance that the service would be maintained with honour and credit

The directions of the Governor General have been so far ful filled that I may report the Burman arms to be expelled from the Aracan territory and that the four provinces of Cheduba Ramree Aracan and Sandoway are now subject to the orders of His Lordship bank, constructed with great judgment, and made particularly strong by the numerous traverses placed in all directions.

- 3. The defences of the town consist in a stockade of considerable extent and some strength, situated about the centre of it, this being protected by several forts upon hills, and one of them completely commanding the road by which you approach. The inhabitants are in quet occupation of their houses, and Napat Nun, at their solicitation, has been continued in his office of Jenudar, charged with the maintenance of peace and good order upon the island.
 - 4 I have directed that eight companies of the 40th Bengal Native Infantry, with the detachment of artillery from Cheduba, under the command of Major Murray, should constitute the garrison of Ramree, and consider they will be quite equal to all the duties that may be required of them at present
 - 5 To Commodore Hayes I am most indebted for his hearty co-operation upon all occasions, and feel the fullest confidence from his able assistance I have every reason to be satisfied with the officers and soldiers under my command, and am happy to inform you they have continued to be healthy
 - 6 Herewith is transmitted a return of captured ordnance

- 5 No opposition was made to our passage and having reach ed Sandovay soon after seven o clock the stockades were taken possession of. There are two neither of any strength though the ground upon which one is constructed had been well chosen Many acts of cruelty are reported to have been committed by the Burmans previous to their departure and four bodies were found said to be executions that had taken place for refusal to accompany them in their retreat.
- 6 It did not appear to me there was any object to be gained by remaining at Sandoway I therefore determined upon embark ing the troops and that they should join the division
- 7 I have to repeat how much I owe to Commodore Hayes and my admiration in him of the good effects of a zealous and animated example for enterprise
- 8 The officers and men under my command have given me much cause to speak well of them for although the enemy has not given us the opportunity of a meeting they have suffered much from continued exposure to extreme heat and in a variety of ways have undergone much fatigue and which they have borno with becoming spirit and cheerfulness.
- 9 Captain Hall Artillery was obliged to proceed sch to Cheduba without furnishing me with any return of the captured ordnance
- 10 I am happy to acquaint you the troops have continued remarkably healthy there being at present only two Europeans sick

By the end of April 1825, the enemy had thus been completely expelled from the four provinces of Arakan (i.e., Arakan, Sandoway, Ramri and Cheduba), and hundreds of them perished in attempting to escape ncross the hills and through the jungles into Ava. At first the Burmese Government evinced some intention of attempting to win back the territory they had thus lost. and assembled several thousand men under the command of one of their most distinguished commanders, Maha Thilwa, partly for that purpose if opportunity offered. and partly to resist any advance the British forces might attempt to make over the mountain range which separates Arakan from Ava. But the setting in of the rainv season prevented any movement, and when the season for operations returned, the enemy found themselves too fully occupied with Sir Archibald Campbell to attempt an invasion of Arakan. It was while this invasion threatened, in May 1825, that Major Bucke was detached with the light companies of the 41th and 51th Foot and 16th Madras Native Infantry and three companies of the 1st Light Infantry Battalion, to follow the enemy's line of retreat from Arakan, over the hills, by Talak, into Ava Proper, and explore the route with a view to future operations in carrying out the remaining portion of the Arakan project, viz., a junction with Sir Archibald Campbell. It is stated that within a few weeks of the return of this expedition, nine-tenths of those who composed it had perished of malarious fevers contracted in the jungles.

The following reports relate to this reconnaissance .-

Fitract from a despatch from Brigadier-General J W Morrison C.B., Commanding the South Eastern Division to the Adjutant General of the Army dated Arakan the Sist May 1825

The enclosed despatch (in original) I received from Major Bucke during last night. The objects contemplated in sending this expedition have been but partially accomplished but the reconnaisance made puts us in possession of correct information as to the exact nature of the country through which the division may yet have to march The troops appear to have greatly suffered from fatigue although the actual distance of each march never exceeded nine miles. The Commander in Chief will I trust, approve of the resolution Major Bucke came to when he found that the enemy were prepared The larlarahs be alludes to as having been taken and shot I have the satisfaction of stating had rejoined the camp the one fired at not having been touched and the other who was made a prisoner having effected his escape It does not appear to me that the Burmese were in force at the pass of the highest range (the furthest spot reached) or that there was anything to indicate that considerable resistance would be offered but as little more information could be gained and it had been I find fully ascertained that the enemy had retreated from Cheedoo Tora to Chalyng where the remnant of their force from this province with reinforcements were collected the vhole amounting to three thousand men under a Chief named Mengee Maha Thilwa, (Atwoon Mangza Tooroo Wyn and his son having been taken to Ammarapura) no advantage could have accrued from still further pressing forward particularly as every mile advanced seems greatly to have multiplied the difficulties in the bringing up of supplies

Report from Major N Bucle Commanding a detackment to Brygadier-General J W Morrison C.B Commanding the South Eastern Division No. 118 B dated Camp Talal, the 27th May 18°5

I have the honour to report to you the return of the detrch ment under my command to thus place last might. I now proceed to relate the movements of the detachment sure my last despatch of the 10th instant. At 3 PM the 19th instant all arrange ments laving been made I marched to a place called Poongu Clatwa a distance of four and a half miles a steep ascent the whole way; descending the hill a little only, on the opposite side, for fresh water—very scarce—halted for the night. Marched again at daylight on the 20th, crossed several ranges of mountains in succession, till we reached Ghos Chakayn, a halting place where fresh water is procurable. The troops and cattle arrived at their ground much fatigued, late in the day. Some of the enemy's scouts were seen here by Captain Drummond's (Assistant Deputy Quartermaster-General) darkaraks, who proceeded on in advance.

May 21st,—marched at 4 A. M; the advance reached Ya Brang Chakayn, at 11 A. M; baggage and rear guard not up till night; the route this day very mountainous; Ya Brang is a mere halting place, with fresh water. Some of the enemy's scouts again seen at this place by Captain Drummond's people, but decamped.

May 22nd,-halted, the detachment being much enfeebled, and many sick. Captain Drummond, with the advanced picket, under an European officer, proceeded in advance early in the morning, to obtain intelligence of the enemy, &c., &c. At about 3 P. M. I received a note from Captain Drummond, dated Keokree Nullah. telling me he had been forward as far as Ackowyn, the next halting place, where fresh water is to be had. I therefore resolved to move forward the next morning, and joined Captain Drummond at Ackowyn about noon on the 23rd instant. We found this march an extremely harassing one, over a continuation of mountains as before. From some information obtained, that the enemy had a post at Tantabain, the next stage, I had partly arranged a plan for surprising the enemy by a night movement. with the effective part of my detachment lightly equipped, leaving my sick and camp standing, when about half past 5 P. M. one of Captain Drummond's guides came running into camp, bringing information the enemy were in the jungle and on the road, only a few miles in our front; their strength could not be ascertained: they were represented to be in two parties. One of the guides had been shot, and the other two taken prisoners by the enemy. From the little knowledge to be obtained of the enemy's force, and convinced they must now have correct information as to the strength of my detachment and its movements, the many obstacles which so mountainous a country presents to my getting up my supplies from Talak, the country through which we have passed not presenting a village or any kind of resources, added to the daily deficiency in my force from debility, I considered it advisable to secure the honour and safety of the detachment by retiring on my supplies at Talak, rather than be decoyed by the enemy too far into their country to effect my retreat.

The sufferings and hardships the troops have already undergone are very considerable. I have been obliged to serve out to the Luropean officers salt rations from the Commissanat supplies. The complete object intended by your instructions for this detachment to execute his not been effected but I feel consinced as much in the way of a recommissance has been accomplished as the means placed at my disposal allowed of without risking the sacrifice of the detachment. The physical powers of the men and officers at the end of the last two days march had been so enfectled they would scarcely have been able to resist the rities of the enemy.

The success attending an assault after a long and fatiguing march must have been doubtful and seems to justify the determination I came to of retring Two clephrates I ad been sent back f r supplies as unloyded and two have died from fitigue and accident I am only waiting the rotum of Mr. Nelson who has proceeded towards Aeng when I shall embark the detachment and return to Arrican. With your permission. I purpose landing the troops at Bulsceparals and marching into cantonments which I calculate upon reaching on the 1st of 2nd program.

Major Bucke's report showed that practically any any antique on the Ava from the side of Arakan was unpossible, and subsequently that portion of the plan of operations was abandoned

After this expedition nothing of importance occurred in Arakan. The advent of the runy serson, however, brought a change in the health of the troops, which had inther to been excellent. Tore and dysentery made their appearance, and, increasing gradually in sevenity, the epidemic crused so enormous a mortality* that even turily the whole of the troops (or rather the wasted rom naits of them) had to be withdrawn altogether from Arakan, detachments only being left at Cheduba Rammand Sandowny, the climate of which places was found to be least pestilential. CHAPTER VIII

THE CONQUEST OF ASSAM

Ir has already been related that on the commencement of the rainy season of 1824, Colonel Richards, with the force operating in Assam, fell back on Gauhati from the advanced positions he had taken up on first driving back the Burmese forces Immediately on this retrograde movement, the enemy re occupied Kalinbur, Rahachauki and Naogong, plundered the whole surrounding country, and even made an incursion into Jainthia Immediately the cessation of the runs enabled lum to move Colonel Richards (who had in the meantime been reinforced by the 57th Bengal Native Infantiv) took measures to drive the enemy from the positions they had taken up Accordingly in October 1824, he sent out two detachments, commanded respectively by Major Waters commandant of the Dinamore Local Battalion,* and Major Cooper commandant of the Champ'nan Light Infantry,† with instructions to expel the enemy from their posts at Raha chaul i, Naogong and Kaliabai

The operations of these detachments are described in the following reports —

Pxtract of a lette from Lieu tenant Colonel A Richards Commainding in Assam to D Scott Esq Agent to it e Governo General on the North East Frontier dated on the river off Gowlatty the 15th November 1834.

I commenced operations about the 20th ultimo by detaching Majors Cooper and Waters—the former to Kalliabur and the latter to Rahael obey—with the intention of repossessing ourselves of the country west of Kalliabur which is as much as I can dobeing without the means of marching a corps in the interior, which I consider absolutely necessary

^{*} The D nappore Local Battalion was d shanded in 1830

[†] The Champaran Light Infantry was dishanded in 1830. This corps did good service during the Goorkha War. 1814 16 and in Alexan in 1824 25.

This detachment has been much longer in reaching Kalliabar than I expected, owing to the casterly winds, strong current, and the tracking grounds being covered with strong and high reeds.

Letter from Major E. F. Waters, Commanding the Dinagepore Local Battation, to Lieutenant-Golonel Richards, Commanding in Aram, dated on the river Kullung, the 29th October 1824.

I have the honour to report to you that I arrived on the evening of the 27th instant at a point of the river opposite Morce Kullung, about one-third of the distance between Jaggee and Rahnehokey, where I received intelligence from Licuterant Neufville, of the Quartermaster-General's Department, of a party of the enemy, amounting to about two hundred and fifty men, being stationed at the village of Hantgong, a few miles inland on the north hank.

2. I determined on surprising them, and with that view proceeded at 1 A.N yesterday morning with a detachment of one hundred light infantry of the Dinagepore Battalion, which I deemed sufficient, having ascertained that their post was oncu. After a fatiguing march of seven hours we reached their position, and completely succeeded in effecting our purpose, the enemy having no intimation whatever of our approach; owing, however, to the thickness of the jungle and the numerous outlets from the village, their loss has been comparatively small. not remain to ascertain the exact amount, but those found killed were chiefly usseel* Burmese. Had a small party of cavalry been with the detachment, not a man could have escaped, as the enemy effected it with great difficulty, and only by abandoning their women and baggage. After continuing the pursuit some distance over very heavy ground and through grass jungle, and finding that I could not gain upon them, I returned to the village of Hautgong, and subsequently to my boats, as and cheerful exerton of the men in this fatiguing march of thirty-one miles, exposed to almost incessant rain and through a country mostly inundated, and feel particularly indebted to the officers who accompanied the detachment (all being on foot). Licutenant Neufville, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Licutenant Jones, of the 46th Regiment, temporarily doing duty with my corps, and Assistant-Surgeon Steuart, for the active assistance afforded me by them in every respect; and I beg further to add that the correct information I received from the Intelligence Department pared the way to ultimate success

* Properly asal, -that is to say, "genuine"

Ietter from Major I' F Waters Commanding the Dinage pore Local Battalion to Lieutenant Colonel Richards Commanding in Assam date I Rahachokey on the river Kullung il e 3rd November 1824

It is with extreme satisfaction that I have the honour to report to you the successful result attending an attack on this post on the morning of vesterday

On approaching Rahachokey I had every reason to believe from the information received from Lieutenant Neufville of the Quartermaster General's Department that my attack on Hautgong had directed the attention of the enemy to the line of the great river and that they were quite unaware of my advance up the Kullung or that our attack had been made from that quarter

I therefore again resumed the expectation of being able to effect another surprise, which was confirmed by repeated intel ligence in progress

On the night of the 1st instant I arrived at the situa tion which was conceived the best distance from the enemys post from whence to push on the detachment destined for the surprise and having embarked one hundred men on the gun and light boats I reached the landing place about two miles below the point of attack which I reached by this arrangement at early daybreak

Having rapidly reconnectered the situation I divided the Б men in two parties directing Licutenants Neufville and Jones of the 40th Regiment to conduct the one by the right into the village and proceeding myself with Mr Assistant Surgeon Steuart with the other by the left through an unfinished stockade which the enemy were throwing up

- 6 The party under Lieutenant Neufville immediately pushed on and fortunately came first on the enemy's chief guard all of whom were either by onetted or shot, and the alarm being given the body rushed out of their houses for the purpose of escaping on the opposite side under a heavy fire this threw them on my party which had made a detour by the left where they were received with great loss. The remainder were pursued nearly two miles and many killed and wounded in the jungles Their loss cannot be estimated at less than one-third of their m m ber I am happy to say no casualty occurred on our side with the exception of one sepoy vounded by a musket ball
- 7 I had previously been informed that a party of sixty Burmahs from the main body at this post had been detached the precelig morning in the direction of Hautgong (fr the purrose of a certaining from what quarter the attack of the 28th ultime had been made, and also to arrange themselves in the villages), and on my return from the pursuit I directed my attention towards them, as Lieutenant Neufville had received information of their expected return to their head-quarters.

- 8. At mid-day their approach was announced, apparently in total ignorance of the defeat of their main body; and in consequence I proceeded with the officers and a party of forty men, with a view of laying in ambush. The plan was, I am happy to add, attended with complete success; and the enemy's loss, in killed and wounded, amounts to nearly half their number, the remainder flying in the greatest confusion towards Namgong, after a feeble attempt at returning our fire.
 - 9. I have the honour to acquaint you that I have sent down those of the prisoners brought in from the jungles by the villagers who are ussee! Burmese, to await your orders. The Doarrees will be useful here in clearing our ground.
 - 10 It is with just satisfaction that I again bring to your notice the active and zealous assistance I derived from the officers under my command (Licutenauts Neutville and Jones, and Mr. Assistant-Surgeon Steuart), in the second affair Lieutenant Jones contributed personally to the loss of the enemy.
 - 11. The very steady and spirited conduct of the men was also very praiseworthy.
 - P. S.—I had omitted to notice that many of the enemy's arms were found in the guard-room and other places, consisting chiefly of old muskets and a great number of swords, of which some belonged to chiefs.

Letter from Major Waters, Commanding the Dinagepore Local Battalion, to Lieutenant-Colonel Richards, Commanding in Assum, dated Namgong, the 6th November 1821.

In continuation of my despatch of the 3rd instant, I have the hours to report, that early on the following morning information was given me that the mean body of the enemy, under the Boora or Moogaum Rajul (the Burmese Governor of Assam), had quitted the stockade in which they had taken post at Namgong, and had moved to another situation with the intention of retreating across the hills into Munnipore. I accordingly ordered out a strong recommassance in the hopes of surprising them, or at least of compelling them to retire within their stockade; and leasting a sufficient party for the protection of the guos and fleet, I proceeded with Lieutenants Neufulle and Jones and Mr. Asestant-Surgeon Steuart towards Namgong

These occurrences were followed by the remainder of the field force under Colonel Richards being moved up to Kaliabar, at which place head quarters were established before the end of December 1824. Advancing from Kaliabar, the force reached Maura Múkh on the 6th January 1825. At this place intelligence was received of the presence of various bodies of the enemy at Kaliana, Kacherihath, Deogorú and Deogaon, and nearer still on the Jorbith road, and Colonel Richards immediately detached portions of his force against them. These detachments were completely successful in putting to flight the parties of the enemy against whom they were directed. Their operations are described in the subjoined reports:—

to the southward and one of them considerably to my rear, I deemed it expedient to endeavour to dislodge them as, were they allowed to remain they would have it in their power to command the road between this and Kalliabar and cut off our supplies and also deter the inhabitants from returning to their houses I therefore detached Captain MacLeod commanding the Rungpore Light Infantry with near two hundred men of that corps yester day at 4 P M so as to reach Cutchers haut by day break if nossi ble and after dislodging the party there to send an officer and one hundred men to Kulecance in the hopes of surprising the party there Another detachment of a company from the 57th under Lieutenant N Jones of that regiment went off last night at eleven o clock to Poduralice which place is on the direct road from Cutchery haut to Jorchaut the present head quarters of the enemy Lieutenant Jones will place his party in ambush to intercept the fugitives from Cutchery haut as it is expected they will take that direction

- There being a road also from Cutchery haut via Deogong to Jorehaut I sent off a patrol of a company from the 57th Regi ment under Lieutenant Hopper of that corps. He marched this morning at four o clock with directions to go about t velve miles on the Deogong road and to attack any small purty he m ght fall in with he was to lay in ambush for the day and to send forward larkaraks to Deogong to learn if there were any party of the enemy there and if they did not exceed three hundred men and in an open siti ation he was to move and attack them to night as the moon rises But at noon to day certain intelligence being brought in that there are four hundred men at Deogong I ordered Captain Martin commanding the o7th Regiment Native Infantry to proceed instantly with another complete company from that corps to reinforce Lieutenant Hopper and to make the attack but suspect the advance of Licutenant Hopper in the morning wil lave caused them to retire In addition to the above parties I have to report that Captain Waldron with one hundred and fity men of the 46th Regiment Native Infantry marched from beace at eleven this forenoon to attack another party of one hundre! and twenty at Deonpoora When I know the result of these expeditions I shall do myself the honour to report
- 4. I ought to have mentioned that Lieutenant Neuf ille has accompanied Critain Martin and that from it o best intelligence I have been able to obtain the enemys force nor in Assan amounts to between six and eight thousand men of every description under Sam Phokan who with the mun body is stationed at Jorchaut

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Richards, Commanding in Assam, to the Denuty Assistant Adjutant-General, Eastern Division, dated Camp Moura Mockh, the 13th January 1825.

I had the honour to report to you, in my letter of the 9th instant, the march of several detachments against the enemy. I have now the honour to transmit copies of letters from the different officers, who have all returned to the ficet, detailing the particulars of their operations. I feel much obliged to the officers and men who have been employed. The object for which they were detached has been completely fulfilled.

2. I am happy to state that, notwithstanding the fears of the inhabitants of those places visited by my detachments. I do not think the enemy will dare to venture to molest them again after their late defeat at all noints.

3. The detachments under Captain MacLeod and Lieutenant N. Jones having joined me this forenoon, I have to report my intention of advancing to-morrow morning upon Jorehaut, at which place the enemy are concentrated and stockaded.

an hour after ten o clock this morning, many hundreds of the enemy attacked my advanced position at Namdong Aulla, over which there is a fine puche bridge and where Captain MacLeod commanded with the Rungpore Light Infantry. The bridge is distant from my present camp about three fourths of a mile on the high road to Rungpore. On hearing the firing I ordered the troops under arms and moved on to the support of Captain MacLeod with two companies of the 57th Regiment and the Dinagepore Local Battalion leaving the remainder of the forner corps under Captain Martin to defind the camp as the lankarrads acquainted me that the enemy meant to attack in three divisions

On my reaching the scene of action I found that gallant officer Captain MacLeod and his little band defending the position in a steady soldier like manner As I perceived the enemy were col lecting and spreading to the right and left in a very heavy jungle in which it was impossible our troops could act with effect and that those in our immediate front were keeping up a very sharp fire of jin gals and muskets I ordered the party on the bridge to retire to the front division and lay down and cease firing. The enemy thought this was the prelude to a retreat and set up a shout and came for ward, but our fire from the advanced division soon made them re tire After this the enemy were apparently gaining confidence and began to shew themselves boldly I therefore gave them half an hour to collect and to induce them to suppose we did not meditate an attack. At the expiration of that time I directed Captain MacLeod to charge their position with the Rungpore Light In fantry followed by the volunteer cavalry * in number 28 under Lieutenant Brooke Sub Assistant Commissary General This was performed with the utmost gallantry and the enemy fled after giving their fire but were overtaken, and Captain MacLeod re ports that full sixty were killed in the charge amongst whom were three plokans mounted on horse back, their horses were taken as also forty one muckets and thirty six spears and four prison The number killed in the charge is independent of those that were killed in the first attack who were all immediately car ried off and it is supposed they must have lost near one hundred killed as the attack lasted one hour and twenty minutes On our side I regret to say Lieutenant and Adjutant Lennedy Rungpore Light Infantry was wounded in the head slightly The other casualties are one sepoy of the same corps and one horse attached to the cavalry wounded. The conduct of the Rungpore Light Infantry and the volunteer cavalry, which belong to the same corps ment my warmest approbation To Captain MacLeod com manding the Rungpore Light Infantry, and Lieutenant Brooke who commanded the volunteer cavalry, and whose conduct is reported by Captain MucLeod to have been most conspicuous my best thanks are specially due, as also to Lacutenant Fleming, offi ciating Sub-Assistant Commissary General, who joined the Rungpore Light Infantry in the charge and to Licutenant and Adjutant Kennedy, and Mr Surgeon Thomson of that corps, for the zealous assistance afforded by them during the action

I trust the guns spare ammunition and supplies will arrive in camp in the course of the night or to morrow morning which will enable me to move forward to the attack of Rungpore on the day following

I omitted to mention in my letter of yesterday's date that forty six prisoners have been taken subsequent to my former letter of the 19th instant

Letter from Lieutenant Colonel A Richards Commanding in Assam, to Captain Shuldham Deputy Assistant Adju tant General Lastern Duisson dated Camp before Rung pore Assam the 29th January 1825

In continuation of my letter of the 27th instant I have to acquaint you for the information of Brigadier General Shuldham commanding the Eastern Division that I was joined by Lieutenants Bedingfeld and Burlton with two howitzers and two 12 pounder carronades on the same evening and having arranged everything for our advance towards Rungport I marched at daybreak on the 29th in the following order -

reported that it was defended by two hundred men and some guns, and that he was fired upon from a fortified tank, a little in advance on the right, and which appeared to command the before-mentioned stockade; and that a gun was also fired from the left, which he considered must have been from the fort of Rungpore, as he observed the tops of pucks buildings and mesques in that direction, distant about three-fourths of a mile; and he also stated that the whole country he traversed was a deep jungle.

Before advancing I gave directions to Captain Waldron, commanding the advance guard, to storm the stockade across the road, if he thought he had a chance of carrying it; but if not, to turn into the jungles, right and left, and act as a covering party, which latter plan he adopted, as the fire of the enemy was extremely heavy. It may be here proper to remark that the stockade had been greatly strengthened and reinforced since Lieutenant Neufville was there, and that the first discharge from the enemy, who were entrenched, brought down more than half of the leading division, which caused a momentary check. At this time the guns and column were about two hundred paces in the rear. On the first shot being fired, I gave directions for the elephants to be cast off from the howitzers, and prepare for action; whilst this was performed, I advanced near to the stockade to examine it and immediately returned to the head of the column and ordered a couple of shells and around or two of grape to be thrown in, and for Captain MacLeod to prepare to assault with the right wing of the 57th Regiment, which was accordingly done in the most gallant style, assisted by the detachment of the 46th Regiment, who rushed forward to support him; and I had the pleasure to see the enemy fly at the moment our troops began to scale and break down the stockade. At this period I was unfortunately wounded, but gave orders for the guns and column to advance, and sent for Major Waters and gave him orders to carry the stockaded tank on the right, or any other outworks the enemy might have, and I would be up so soon as my wound had been dressed. Herewith I have the pleasure to enclose a copy of that officer's letter, stating what occurred from the time he assumed the command until I joined, which I was able to do in a doolie in about twenty minutes.

Lieutenant Fleming, officiating Sub Assistant Commissary-General—the staff attached to this force—for the prompt and great assistance I have at all times received from them in the execution of their respective duties.

Letter from Mayor E F Waters, to Captain Bayldon, Mayor of Brigade Assam, dated Camp before Rungpore, Assam, the 29th January 1825

I have the honour to apprise you for the information of Lieutenant Colonel Richards communding in Assum that agreeably to his instructions I repaired to the head of the column on his being wounded and on assuming the temporary command, I perceived Captini Martin in possession of the stockade and posts on the right flank, and the Burmahs in full and precipitate retreat towards the fort, from which a strong fire was opened. I immediately ordered the artillery to the front, which soon silence of the enemy's fire. Precautionary measures were then taken for the security of the posts vacated by the enemy, and a verbal report of circumstances made to Lieutenant-Colonel Richards

Despatch from Lieutenant Colonel A Biel aids Commanding in Assam, to Captain Shuldi am Deputy Assistant Adjutant General Eastern Division dated the 2nd February 1825.

In continuation of my despatch of the 29th ultime I have the honour to acquaint you for the information of Brigadier General Shuldham Commanding the Eastern Division of the army, that on the moon setting on the morning of the 30th, the chemy in small parties came out and attack of the pickets but were soon compelled to reture with the loss on our side of two sentires killed and on their part in a far as is known of one man killed

2 The firing from the fort continued during the whole of the might and morning at intervals, but as they had not the range of our camp I did not return a shot as the place is too extensive to have made any great impression and our supply of aminumition being but small I was anxious to reserve it for the day of attack.

3 About ten o clock on the morning of the 30th a flag of truce was seen coming from the fort and I sent out Captain Bayldon Brigade Major and Lieutenant Neufville Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General to receive it.

4 These officers having met the herald and conducted him to the outer picket reported to me that he represented him soil to be a native of Coylon by name Durmadur Burmacheres must years resident in Hengal and the eastern islands in the employment of various well known public servants and conversant with our manners and customs at present vay gurr, or chief priest to the Saum and Burnese authorities in Assam and an accredited messenger from Saum and Baglee Phokuns to me

- 5 I accordingly directed him to be admitted under the usual forms of precaution
- 6 After his introduction he said that he was deputed by the phol ans to enquire what were the objects of our present advance upon Rungpore? To which I replied that my instructions were to clear the country of Assam of all opposing forces, and to occupy it on the part of the British Government for the protection of the inhabitants, that I was surprised at the question since I conceived the pholans must have been already apprised of our intentions by Mr Scotts (Agent, Governor General) communication in refly to theirs
 - 7 The guru expressing his total ignorance of the receipt by the photans, of Mr Scotts letter I explained the general tenor of the contents which he promised faithfully to deliver to the plokans and to return in the course of the day with their reply I also took the opportunity of bringing forward a messenger of the photans returning with despatches from Mr Scott who had arrived in camp the same morning and of delivering the letters to the guru for transmission to the photans
 - 8 They proved to be the delayed communication above adverted to $^{\prime}$

by compulsion. To this latter alternative I was induced by find ing from the gurn the impracticability of a rlan propos d 13 me to separate the two fictions, Is admitting the friendly dis posed portion to the benefit of terms provided they would come over and abandon the others to their fite on a continuance of hos tritties with us. This he declared impossible since the latter con siderably a reponderate in strength over the former though headed by the chiefs and that the shahtest suspicion of such an inclin ation would entail bloodshed and destruction, not only on their families here but in their own country. I was also compelled reluctantly to reflect on the total want of means in my power to I revent their escape or to pursue them in which case all hope of rescuing the captive Assamese inhabitants must have been aban doned It was at the same time clearly pointed out to the plo lane and understood by them that any act of plunder or aggres sion committed by the retiring party in progress through Assam or in the territories of our allies would be tantamount to an infringement of engagements and aguin draw down on them our arms.

11 The following morning the guru returned accompanied by two inferior phol and (the brothers of Saum Phokun and Hathoe Phokun) with a friendly offering and a letter from the chiefs of which a translation is enclosed.

12 After much desultory conversation the guru returned with my reply and an exchange of presents.

13 On the following morning a message was brought from the give by his brother Ruttin Fal stating that in compliance with my terms one portion was preparing to evacuate the fort for their own country and that the remainder were ready to surrender, also that the chiefs were auxious to wait on me to adjust the various points of capitulation.

14 I accordingly invited them to a conference and directed the officers of my staff to proceed to meet them and conduct them to me

15 The principal chiefs, Saum Phokun Sheick Phokun and Nydaroo Phokun (Baglee Phokun having joined the other party and quitted the fort) having been introduced we proceeded to ar range the terms of treaty of which the principal are as follows—

On the part of Saum Phokun &c that all his followers should deliver up their arms and warlike stores of all descriptions and that possession of the fort be given to us the moment the evacuating party should have quitted it

On our part that their wi es and personal property should be guaranteed their wives, children and all who may be voluntarily attached to them secured to them in conformity with instructions from Mr Scott, Agent, Governor General, that they should remain in every respect in their present situation, until the arrival of Mr Scott, or instructions from him respecting their ultimate distination, and thirt, having once entered into bonds of friendly alliance with us they shall not eventually be delivered over to the King of Ava in case of a peace, should he make such a stipulation of which they entertained great dread, and were most anxious to receive positive assurances.

16 These points being settled, the chiefs expressed their willingness to surrender without delay, and I accordingly directed Major Waters to take a party and receive charge, when I had soon the satisfaction of seeing His Majesty's colours flying on the top of the palace in the inner fort under a salute from the battery in camp

17 The examination of the fort fully justified the opinion I had formed of the importance of the acquisition by the mode adopted, and of the utter madequirey of my menus of preventing the escape of the greater part of the garrison, should we have proceeded to the assault. The place is of very great extent, and surrounded by deep swamps and jungle, with a ditch. The sorties to the three gates were strongly defended, and on them and the walls were more than two hundred pieces of ordinance

Return of ordnance and military stores surrendered by captulation to the force under the command of Lieutenant Colonel A Richards on the 1st February 1825

Translation of a Burmese letter addressed to Licutemant Colonel Richards, Commanding in Assam, referred to in the foregoing despatch

Moonkoong Alampoo alias Saum Phokun represents on the part of himself and the other chiefs to the English Commander in Assam that the inhabitants of Assam were originally slaves to the Burman Emperor and that an embassy was sent by the Rajah to the King of Ava to solicit assistance and to request he would send troops into Assam in consequence of which men from five states all subjects to the Burman authority were collected and ordered to invade the country Now a number of the chief men of Assam have invited you to come in to turn us out and we were aware of this but the Assamese wish for their own benefit to provoke us to war with each other by which both parties would suffer We therefore to prevent this are willing to evacuate this country and, to prove our sincerity we depute Durmadur Burmacherce a native of Ceylon and our high priest to appriso you of this and as the people of Assam are now immical to us we will immediately retire to our own country to inform our king of it and we hope you will not molest us on our journey and that you will send orders to the claul is under your control to allow us to pass unmolested This is absolutely necessary as if we were attacked on our retreat it will cause much bloodshed.

Letter from Lewtenant Colonel Richar's dated Cump before Rungpore, the 31st Januar, 18°5,—in reply to tle above

I have received your friendly letter by the lands of Durma dur Burmacheree high priest and fully comprehend its contents. I am willing to permit your force to retire from Assam and will not commit hostilities or molest you with any attack from my army provided you go peaceably and without committing depredations on the country or inhabitants of Assam Your wiles children, and such people as are willing may accompany you but none of the inhabitants of Assam are to be taken away by force. I will give orders to all under my authority and to chaukes not to molest you on your way out of Assam which you will leave immediately and by the most direct route

By the fall of Rangput, the conquest of Assam was practically completed, for the enemy held no other fortified posts within the province. It was some time, however, before the province was brought into order, numerous bodies of Burmese, joined by Singphos and other savage tribes from the hills on the north east, taking advantage of the anarchy into which the country had sunk during the Burmese occupation, began to plunder, burn and murder on their own account. Detachments had frequently to be sent against these marauders, and several encounters took place. After their defeat at Bira Gaum, however, the enemy did not again assemble, and order was gradually introduced.

Despatch from Leutenant Colonel Richards to Captain Sluidl am Deputy Assistant Adjutant General Eastern

- Division dated Camp near Rungpore Il e 8th February 18.5

Dullung Nuddee, distant from my camp about seven miles north east where the Sing phos were reported to be in a stockade, but the plund-rers had at appeared, received intelligence of our advance and in consequence, having previously divided into three separate parties, they fled. Captain Martin on being informed of this circumstance by some villagers, pushed on the cwalty in pursuit of one party, consisting of about forty men horsemen soon came up with them, and entirely dispersed them killing five and wounding several who got into the heavy grass jungle, and escaped further pursuit

In the meantime Captain Martin with the infantry, was conducted by a detour to the right of the post of the Sing phos main body but found they had also recently quitted it however perceived in the vicinity a body of about thirty armed men, with several women interspersed amongst them advanced they threw down their arms and diclared themselves to be Burmese retiring from Rungnore on the faith of their capitulation, but as their situation in the midst of the Sing phot was suspicious Captain Martin very properly determined to secure them for future investigation After this Captain Martin with great judgment continued the pursuit of the Sing phos until the cavalry came on the track of the flying enemy but found they had quitted all the pathways and taken a direction through thick reed jungle which rendered further pursuit unmarking of another party of Sing-phos, who were reported to be plundering and burning several villages in a north-west direction from this camp; but after the detachment had been out the whole day, it returned to camp, and Captain Chapman reported that the Singphos had fled prior to his arrival:

On the 4th instant I deemed it advisable to detach Captain Waldron, of the 46th Regiment, at twelve o'clock at night, with the volunteer cavalry and a detail of infantry of the same strength as that sent with Captain Chapman, in a southerly direction from this camp, with instructions to attack the Singphos wherever he might find them, and to follow them. This party returned to camp yesterday afternoon, and Captain Waldron reports that the Sing-phos had obtained intelligence of his approach, and that they had quitted their position a day previous to his arrival, and had gone in the direction of Jypore, situated at the mouth of the pass leading into the Sing-phos' country. He followed their route for a considerable distance, but was not able to come up with them. Their ravages in this quarter seem to have been unusually barbarous and cruel, whole villages having been burnt to the ground, and their inhabitants carried off into slavery.

- 3 They lost either eight or ten killed and I should suppose many must be wounded from the precision with which the men fired
- 4 The principal of the three chiefs (who was recognised by my Burmese to be Ao ladung Poh) escaped most narrowly, being several times almost at the point of the bayonet.
- 5 The only casualty on our part is one sipalis wounded by a punjal *
- G I have brought down with me the chiefs of the village prisoners as security for the ransom of the numerous Assamese captives of uffined in their jungles
- 7 I feel greatly indebted to Ensign Bogle for his active and cordial co operation and the cheerful soldier like conduct of the men deserves the highest praise
- S I have also the honour to report that having heard of a for viringling Saums + from amongst those who quitted Rungpore with Boglee Phokan being concealed in the jungles near Suddeers I detached a party to bring them in, five out of the nine were secured with their families and I shall take the earliest opportunity of sending them down
- 9 I have received a letter from the three chiefs nowly arrived written in their usual style of verbiage and finishing with a desire that I should immediately go back to Rungpore, and on my arrival there fall back with the whole force out of Assum to which I returned the annexed reply

Reply to the letter of the Chrefs S th Doungh Menglah Poh, and Ao Zoung Poh after complements

Letter from Lieutenant Colonel A Richards Commanding in Assam to Lieutenant Colonel W I Watson Adjutant General of the Army Head Quarters, Calcutta dated Camp Rungpore the 21st June 1825

For the information of His Excellency the Commander in Chief I have the honour to transmit to you copy of a letter ad dressed by me this day to the Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General of the Eastern Division conveying the copy of a despatch from Lieutenant Neufville commanding at Now Dehing Mookh of which the enclosed is a duplicate

Letter from Lieutenant J B Neufeille Deputy Assistant Quartermuster-General Commanding Detachment to Captum Martin Major of Brigade Assam dated near Wakeyut on the Now Dekung the 15th June 1823.

I have the henour to report for the information of Colonel Richards Commanding that the state of the weather framing resumed a favour-ble appearance on the 4th instant and intelligence up to the evening of that day reporting no alteration in the strength or disposition of the enemy I prepared to proceed against them according to my original intention and learning a party of two gun boats with thirty sepoys and the proportion of non-commissioned officers under a subadar to protect the post and passage of the Dehing embarked the remainder of the detachment on covered cances and rafts

2 At daybreak on the 5th we commenced our progress up the Now Dehung The delay and difficulties in the passage proved much greater than I had anticipated and we did not reach the lurge deserted village of Locyung till the evening of the 8th

3 Here we were obliged to leave the gun boats and grid traites and by dragging the cances up the rapids with great labour in which all hands were obliged to assist arrived on the afternoon of the 9th at a point opposite Dupha gaum which I now found to be situated three or four miles inland on the right bank.

4 As it was evident that we could proceed no further by water we occupied the remainder of the day in unsuccessful

- 12. While there I received information from several quarters that the enemy had abandoned Beesa-gaum, and had gone off towards their own country, immediately on the arrival of the fugitives from Dupha, and shortly afterwards a letter was brought from the Gaum of Beesa to the same effect, adding that as they had carried off all his people and property, it would be needless for me to take my whole detachment there, since he could give me no supplies or assistance.
 - 13. As, however, I had very great reason to suspect treachery on the part of the Beesa Gaum, and that he was 'endeat-vouring to entice me into a snare, I resolved upon proceeding immediately, without countermanding the orders previously given for the mode of attack, or departing from any of the necessary precautions during the line of march. The event proved the justice of my suspectons; for on arriving within about two miles of Beesa, I was informed, by my scouts and some Assamese deserters, that the enemy had returned from their feint, and had been received into the stockade belonging to the Gaum, with whom they were acting in concert; and shortly afterwards the advanced guard saw two mounted Burmese, who immediately fell back.
 - 14. When within a quarter of a mile from the post, we saw the enemy on the open spot below the first stockade drawn up in line, with some horse on their right advancing as to oppose us. We immediately debouched from the jungle to the clear plains below (the bed of the river), and formed line in the front.
 - 15. No sooner was it put in motion, preparatory to the charge, than the enemy faced about and commenced a rapid retreat to the stockades, followed up by us as quickly as the required preservation of regularity and the inequality of the ground would admit.

confirm their confusion, and also to cover the escape of the - Assamese captives.

- 20 Thu dity he performed in the most able manner, and the result giving liberation to several hundreds of these unfortunate people, must be equally gratifying to his own feelings as it is creditable to his tact and judgment.
- 21. From the top of the first pass the extreme rear of the enemy were seen clearing the second and I conclude their flight to have been a great paine, from the git chattahs, silver swords, and other insigns of the chiefs abandoned on the route
- 22 Before quitting Beesa we endeavoured, as far as possible, to burn and destroy the houses and works, but, with all the assistance we could procure could but purtually effect our purpose from their great strength and extent. They are all however, too much dismantled to be again tenable without considerable repair.
- 23 In the detail of operations the commanding officer will perceive how entirely I must have been indebted for success to the active and zealous co operation of the officers under me Licutenant Kerr and Ensign Bogle most nobly seconded by the men who I may venture to assert, in all that regards the solider as well in cheerful endurance of more than ordinary fargue and privation ardent alacrity on every prospect of service and steady bravery when opposed to the enemy, could have been surpassed by no troops whatever
- 24 Captain Bedford of the Survey Department who accomputed us throughout as a volunteer gave me the benefit of his experience and personal assistance on every occasion.

Before quitting the narrative of events on the Eastern and North Eistern Frontier, it is to be mentioned that during this year (1825), in abandonment of the defensive system, a design was formed of penetrating into Axa by way of Kachar and Manipur, it being argued that if the Burmese could penetrate the jungles and forests to invade Kachar, our troops could do the same in the opposite direction. Accordingly, a force of about seven thousand men was assembled at Sylhet in January, organized as follous.—

This force moved forward in February 1825 to Bhadrapur, and thence to Banskandı and Dudhpatlı by a road which was constructed by the pioneers in advance of the troops. Beyond this point the real difficulties of the expedition began, and it was soon found that any attempt to penetrate even as far as Manipur by this route was hopeless for regular troops

The expedition was accordingly abandoned in March 1825, and the force broken up, only a few troops being left in Kachar to guard against any possible incursion from the other side

The let and 2nd Bengal Infantry brigades were with Brigadice-General Morruss, c s , in Arakan.

Later on, in May 1825, Gambhir Sing was allowed to make an attempt to recover Manipur at the head of his irregular forces. Accompanied by Lieutenant Pemberton of the Proneers, he started on this expedition on the 17th May, and before a month had passed he had succeeded in tuning the enemy out of Manipur, and driving him into the hills and jungles lying between that country and Ava

. CHAPTER IX.

OPERATIONS IN AVA, JANUARY TO JUNE 1825.

The defeats experienced by the Burmese Army at Rangoon and Kokien, in December 1824, caused so complete a dispersion of the forces of the "Golden Monarch," notwithstanding the evertions made by Maha Bandula to rally them at Donabyo, that even the Burmese General, with all his confidence in his own fortune and genius, began to feel dispirited, and in January 1825 he actually made some indirect overtures regarding peace. A suitable reply was sent, but there the matter dropped; and this was probably due to reinforcements having joined Maha Bandula, and thereby revived his confidence in his ability to contend with the British forces.

About the same time some Talain chiefs at Martaban brought an offer of help against the Burmese from the Siamese generals on the frontiers of Pegu; but beyond a civil acknowledgment no notice was taken of the offer, which, as afterwards tausspired, was not authorised by the Government of Bangkok.

From the time when the Burmese army was driven from the neighbourhood of Rangoon, Sir Archibald Campbell had been preparing his forces for a forward movement on Prome, for which the season was now favourable. The cold weather had produced a most beneficial effect on the health of the troops; reinforcements had arrived from Bengal; and altogether circumstances were of a character to promise a successful issue to a movement on the enemy's capital. As a preliminary measure, honever, it was necessary to drive the enemy from any posts from which he might be able to attack Rangoon, the base of operations, or interrupt the line of communication. Such were Striam and Thantabain, from which, as has nircady been related, the Burmese had been dislodged in 1-24; but as it was not then a part of Sir Archibald Campbell's plan to hold these places, they were re-occupied by the enemy as soon as the British troops retired.

Some peasants that have come in state Bandula's late army is still dispersing and himself, with only a few thousand men at Donaby o but using every exertion in his power not only to stop the fugitives but issuing orders for fresh levies said to be hittle attended to

When the Burmese grand army were here, they uncov ered some of the walls of the old Portuguese fort and factory at Svriam and by throwing up parapets &c &c rendered it a tolerably strong post which had since continued to be occupied by a small force of the natives of the Synam district, and I have reason to think they had been joined by some of the men who deserted from their chiefs when ordered to go and retake Martabun. Although this post did not offer us any annoyance whatever jet I did not wish to leave it occupied from the facility its contiguity to the river afforded of being troublesome to our boats on the breal ing up of the British army from Rangoon I therefore on the morning of the 11th instant detached a small force against it. consisting of two hundred men from His Majesty's 47th Regiment * with a detachment of seamen and marines from the Royal Navv and the Honourable Company's flotilia under the command of Lieute nant Colonel Elrington with orders to scour that part of the country as far as the Syriam Pagoda of any enemy to be met with Licutenant-Colouel in the course of a few hours came before the fort and the bridge over the nullah leading to it from the landing place having been broken down much labour and some delay was occasioned in repairing it during which the enemy, from behind the works kept up a smart and well directed fire on the head of the column which caused some loss but no sooner were the troops able to cross than they rushed on and gallantly carried the place by storm The Lieutenant Colonel afterwards wert on to the Syriam Pagoda also found to be occupied by a small force of the enemy who fled after the discharge of one volley and scenng the British troops rush on to the assault.

RANGOON,
The 14th January 1825

Extract from a deepatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, KCB de de &c, dated the 16th January 1925

All my sources of information from the interior of the country give meto understand that the immense army lately before is a still dispersing in spite of every effort of some of their chiefs to stop them, but it will be seen by the information con tained in the enclosure received this day that the collection of another army is in progress

2 I last might received a most extraordinary communication from the General Maha Bandula.* Although not immediately to my address the bearer of it was instructed by that General to deliver it to me in person

3 • • • The bearer of his letter is a Bengal lascar a descrite from the transport ship David Scott who descrited from her the very day she arrived in this river work into the jungles and was there made prisoner. He was brought near to our shipping at homeendine by a large Burmese boat and then drifted off in a cance. He is to return this evening with my ansier.

[•] This was a letter addressed by Maha Bandula to Mes rs G been Arathoon Turner Snawball and others who had long resided n Ava and some of whom had be on prisoners in the bands of the Burnere requesting them to ascertain with what was or intentions. the British had invoked the domination of the Golden Ling

ENCLOSURE

15th January 1825—The Carrians* employed in the intelligence department returned last evening and state that Mounsoo azar Lansago Much eaa on named Mounkea on Oon Shaonda Maungee are reported to have arrived at Prome and are endea vouring to collect another army, with a view to make a last effort against the British troops at Rangoon, that if they are not retorious they will yield but that they will most assuredly make the effort as artillery and muskets are said to have been brought down from Ava. When the attack will be made they do not know, neither are they acquainted with the exact force the above chiefs have been able to collect

2 The Carrians state the greater part of the Bandula's army have dispersed Cassay horse &c. and that great efforts are making to re collect them but with little success as those sent to soize the fugitives are invariably opposed by them and that constant fighting occurs between the two parties the people declaring that it is useless to attempt to cope with a force so far guiperior in every way to themselves

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, KCB &c to George Swinton Esq Secretary to Govern ment Secret and Political Departments &c. &c. &c Fort William dated Head Quarters Rangoon the 11th Febru ary 1825

Deeming it of importance previous to the troops finally breaking up from quarters to dislodge the enemys advanced division from their defences on the Lyng river I directed Licutenant Colonel Godwin to proceed with a body of troops to Thintabun and summon the enemy to retire from his works which in the event of the summons not being attended to he was further directed to take possession of by force of arms

2. A detail of the operations of the column is herewith sent affording me another opportunity of bringing to the notice of the Right Honble the Governor General in Council the judgment and decision of Leutenant-Colonel Godwin and Captun Chads R.N (appointed by Captain Alexander to the navial command on that service) and bearing no less honourable testim as to the irrestitible intripility so often displayed both lessly and radios on this expectation.

Despatch from Lieutenant-Colonel H. Godwin, Commanding H. M.'s 41st Regiment, to Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, KCB, &c, Commander of the Forces in Burmah, dated Rangoon, the 9th February 1825.

The force you did me the honour to place under my command on the 5th instant, for the capture of the enemy's works at Quagalle, or Thantabain, reached that point on the 6th at five in the evening.

2. I am to premise that on the morning of the 6th a flag of truce was sent up with the two Burmese prisoners conveying your proclamation, and which was received by the enemy and replied to most respectfully, explaining the inability of the chief to surrender, in a language of mildness rarely used by this vain and barbarous people.

The position of the enemy was a strong and imposing one, upon the point of a peninsula forming an angle of 1,440 paces, strongly stockaded and abattised down to the bank of the river, but entirely open to the rear.

The Satellite, armed ship, towed by the steam-boat, and directed by Captain Chads, H. M's ship Arachne, laid her broadside on so admirably as to enfilade the whole of the principal face of the works.

- 9. The next day, the 7th, the two branches of the Panlang river were reconnoitred,—the right by Captain Chads, whom I accompanied, and the left by Lieutenant Keele,—for eighteen miles. up, and an immense quantity of fire-rafts were destroyed.
- 10. May I request your thanks to Captain Chads, of H. M.'s ship Arachne, commanding the naval part of the expedition, for the large share he had in the capture of this post; for Captain Graham, Bengal Rocket Troop; Captain Waterman, H. M.'s 13th Light Infantry, Assistant Quartermaster-General; and Lieutenant Cochran, H. M.'s 41st Regiment, my acting Brigade-Major. The conduct of the details of the European and Native corps reflects the highest honour on their respective regiments, and merits your warmest approbation.

By the first week in February, Sir Archibald Campbell had completed his arrangements for a forward movement on Prome Detailing for Rangoon a garrison of Native troops and such of the Europeans as were unfit for immediate field service, he divided the remainder of his force into three columns. Of these the first under his personal command, to proceed by land, was about 2,700 strong and was composed of the following troops.—

1st Troop 1st Briga le Bengal Horse Artillery

Detachment of the 2nd Troop 2nd Brigade Bengal Horse Artillers (Rocket Troop)

The second column, under the command of Brigadier-General Cotton, to proceed by water, was not quite 1,200 strong, and was composed of part of the Rocket Troop, a detechment of Madias Foot Artillery, the 89th Foot, the 1st Madias European Regiment, and a portion of the 18th Madras Native Infantry The thud, under the command of Major Sale, 13th Toot, about 800 strong, comprised the 13th Foot, the 12th Madras Native Infantry. and a detachment of artillers, and was to move against Bassem, clear that district of the enemy, and then, moving across the country to Henzada, there join the main column under the Commander of the Forces A reserve column was also to be formed at Rangoon from the troops left there, to move forward under the command of Brigadier M'Creagh, and join the main column under Sir Archibald Campbell as soon as sufficient carriage for it could be obtained their best to provide us with draft cattle and hackeries. I have reason to place some faith in their promises and am rather sanguint in expecting they will essentially contribute to the equipment of a column of reserve which I hope will be ready to move forward upon Prome early next month

- 4 The Talain chiefs mentioned in my despatch of the 3rd instant have not yet arrived although I am apprised of their hiving left Martiban in a gun vessel for this place many days ago and the season is now too rapidly advancing to admit of my waiting another hour for them I will however direct Brigadier M Creagh whom I leave in command at Rangoon to receive them with every possible attention and endeavour to turn the sentiments which they now profess to the public advantage
- 5 I have ordered Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant Smith to assume the command at Martaban with directions to cultivate a good understanding with the Siamese and to encourage the disaffected Peguers without entering into the slightest pledge or 1 romise beyond mere countenance and support while he may chance to remain in their neighbourhood.

SIR ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, with the main or land column, marched from Rangoon on the 13th February 1825, the water column, under Brigadier-General Cotton, followed on the 16th; while that intended for the reduction of Bassein sailed on the 17th. The movements of this last will be first narrated.

Major Sale, with the force under his command, arrived off the mouth of the Bassein river on the 24th February, and proceeded up two days later. During his progress up the stream several stockades were destroyed. Bassein itself was reached on the 3rd March, and was occupied without resistance, the enemy having fired the place and fled to Lamina, a town about a hundred and fifty miles higher up the river. Thither Major Sale followed, but only to find the place abandoned. He then returned to Bassein, and soon afterwards was recalled, with the greater part of his force, to Rangoon, the movement to Henzada, originally proposed, having, by the course of other events, become unnecessary. From Rangoon the detachment afterwards proceeded up and joined the main body under Sir Archibald Campbell.

people were divided in opinion, some wishing to defend and others to resign and trust to us. The result was the town was destroyed by fire and totally deserted.

- 6. On the evening of the 3rd we anchored off the smoking remains, and I immediately landed the troops and took post in the area of the principal pageds. I find, upon going over the ground, that although the town has been generally burnt, yet there are some good private houses remaining. I have sent out proclamations in various directions, and have reason to expect many of the people will return. The principal Arab, Ally Mahomed, is among those who have already come in I rom all that I can learn, I cannot expect any extensive supply of cattle for carriage, but I trust soon to have it in my power to send a more detailed and satisfactory account.
 - 7. The general system in this part of the country appears to be for the stronger party to molest and plunder the weaker, and to drive them from their houses. I understand that the headman of Bassein has retreated to Lamina, which is represented to be six days' journey by the country boats, and that none larger can get to it. There are about two hundred followers and one hundred mushets said to be with him, but they have not any stockade, and the town is said to be already partially burnt.
 - 8. I have made every exertion to get a courier to proceed by land, but have not succeeded in effecting this, nor can the beats proceed by the creeks to Rangoon at this season, or I should have sent them by that route Failing in this, I have despatched the arraed row-beats to Rangoon by the outer passage, Lieutenant Kershaw taking the despatch.
 - 9. I have the honour to enclose a return of the ordnance taken at Bassein, and wait further orders,

BASSEIN, The 5th March 1825. Sd.) W COUNSELL, Lieut, Comdg. Artillery Detachment

The water column under the command of Brigadier-General Cotton arrived on the 19th February at Punling, at which place the enemy had constructed some strong stockades, which, however, they abandoned after a feeble resistance Leaving the detachment of the 18th Madras Native Infantry to hold the place and keep open the communication with Rangoon, Brigadier-General Cotton continued his route up the river, entered the main stream of the Irrawadi on the 27th, and next day came in sight of Donabyo at which place Maha Bandula, with fifteen thousand men held a strongly entrenched position. It was the 5th March, however, before the British force was in position and a summons to surrender having been rejected, the troops were landed on the 7th and moved to the attack first stockade assauled was carried with little loss, but the next offered a most vigorous resistance, and eventually succeeded in completely repulsing the attack, with heavy loss to the assulants Owing to a portion of the force having been left behind at Panlang, the attacking column was scarcely 600 strong a force quite inadequate to the storming of such fortifications as those of Donabyo The column being now still further reduced by the casualties of the assault Brigadier General Cotton was obliged to abandon the attack and after communicating to Sir Archibald Campbell the intelligence of the renulse. he re embarked the troops and fell back to Young young. where he remained until the arrival before Donabio of the land column under the Commander of the Forces

Despatch from Brigadier General Willoughby Cotton Commanding the Water Column to Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell KOB & Commander of the Forces &c &c. &c. dated Panlasg the 24th February 1850

I have the honour to see user you that the water column embarked and proceeded to lagoda Point on the 16th instant Ou the 17th they reached Teesit where three stockades destroyed by Brigadier-General Fraser some time since, were found rebuilt. but evacuated; they were immediately destroyed. The light division of boats from His Majesty's Navy, under Lieutenant Smith of the Alligator, was fired upon some few miles in advance the same evening from the bank, where the enemy had a stockaded breastwork, and lost two men killed and one wounded. The boots pulled under fire of their carronades immediately on shore, and destroyed it. On the morning of the 18th, I directed Major Basden, commanding the advance, to reconngitre the right bank and burn another stockade we had discerned the evening before, which was done, and the flotilla proceeded up the river. On approaching Panlang, we anchored the body of the column, and I proceeded with Captains Alexander and Chads of the Royal Navy and Captain Steel. Assistant Quartermaster-General, to reconnoitre in our front, directing the advance division to follow in support. On reaching the light division at dusk, who were resting on their cars, we found ourselves in sight of one of the outwork stockades of Panlang on the left, called Yooatheet. It was too late to complete the reconnaissance, but the light division were anchored immediately out of gun-shot, supported by the advance, which took a position in their rear. During the night, some formidable fire-rafts were launched by the enemy, but, owing to the precautionary measures of Captain Alexander, their effect was totally lost.

are due to Captains Ker and Laurie, of the Adjutant General's Department, and the whole of the staff of the Madras Division were most anxious to display their zeal for the service Brigade-Major Sadher and Captain Wainwright, of the 47th Regi ment, and Lacutenant Wilson, of the 13th who are on my personal staff, I return my warm acknowledgments for their activity and zeal To Captain Kennan, who commanded the artillery, every praise is due, and he speaks of Lieutenants Symes and Onslow as having been emmently useful under his orders. The practice of the portion of the Rocket Troop we had on board the steam boat under Lieutenant Paton was excellent, and materially aided the operations of this evening, and I beg to bring that officer strongly to your notice. I have requested permission from Captain Alexander to express my obligations to Lieutenant Smith, of His Majesty's ship Alligator, for the gallantry and judgment with which he has always conducted the light division of boats, and I take leave to bring him to your particular notice He has mentioned to me that he has derived great assistance from Lieutenants Leele and Kellet, of the Royal Navy Lieute nant-Colonel Mallet has reported to me in the strongest terms the exertions of his Brigade Major, Captain Young, of His Majesty s that the light and advance divisions had the evening before taken up a position in the river Irrawaddy commanding the entrance of the branch leading to Panlang The report received was that the passage though extremely intricate might be made good The following morning the 26th we were enabled to proceed to Talynda the distance estimated to be eighteen miles from the last anchorage Here commenced the shallows and the heavier vessels grounded On the 27th it was found necessary to unload the steam vessel and gun schooners for which purpose boats were allotted, and the remainder of the flotilla joined the advance division in the Irrawaldy I proceeded on the 28th to reconneitre and first came in contact with the enemy at Young young about ten miles above our position They occupied the left bank of the river as we advanced and appeared to be an outpost from Donabyo the white pagoda of which was visible about ten miles higher up the river The right bank was deserted except by a few Carnans assisting the heavy vessels through the shallows and over the bar were directed to proceed and occupy the position reconnoired the day before. When they had advanced about half way it was discovered that the enemy had occupied a post on the right band and pushed on thirteen war boats. The latter were direct away by the boats of the light division, while a few men of the 39th Regiment were landed who dispersed the former killing some and taking one prisoner at the expense of four men slightly wounded. The flottlla occupied the position pointed out resting their life upon an island which here d vides the river. Two six pounders were placed upon the point completely commanding the space between the island and the left bank, which is about one-third of the whole width of the river and giving us free inter course with the right bank.

a civil but decided refusal to accede to the proposed terms. A party of 160 men of His Majesty's 89th Regiment, covered by the light division and some row boats, had been prepared to land on the right bank to reconneitre a point opposite to the main stockade which was in possession of some men belonging to war boats that were lying under cover of the bank of the river This party was immediately advanced, some of the war boats retired under the guns on the opposite side, where they were unassailable. and the object of the reconnaissance was completely gained. During the time that our boats were in progress, and while lying at the point the enemy kept up an incessant fire from about thirty pieces of cannon, many of heavy calibre The precision with which they were directed gave a colouring of truth to the report that the chief Bandula had been for some time practising his artillery The range had been well ascertained and the river was commanded all across The point is well adapted for a battery of heavy mortars, an island above the main stockade would be available for the same purpose, and by attacking on that side the necessity of previously carrying the lower stockades would be obviated. This was the plan of attack, I was most anxious to adopt. The objections to it are as follow -In consequence of your short despatch of the 2nd instant from Sarawah. and to supply the wants of the column under my command I des natched on the 5th eight flat boats to Panlang to bring provisions for both columns. This entailed upon us the absolute necessity of maintaining the command of the river between Donabyo and that post, or hazarding the capture of a convoy upon which the success of the whole campaign will depend. The column you did me the honour to place under my command was originally composed of 750 bayonets (European) exclusive of the 18th Regiment Native Infantry, stationed at Panlang, of these twentyfive men were left to guard the armed transport Satellite about twenty five more were sick, a proportion less than I could have expected and small guards are required for the different boats. leaving me about 660 bayonets disposable for the attack of a strong place, the garrison of which is nowhere estimated at less than twelve hundred men well furnished with artillery and mus kets. It is obvious that this small force could not be separated Upon consulting with Captain Alexander whether, if I passed the position for the purpose of attacking above it, he could keen open the river below us it was his opinion that one half of the force would be requisite for this important purpose. Your des patch from Lain of the 24th ultimo depending upon me for the conquest of this position devolved upon me the necessity of making the attempt and I had no option but that of landing below the whole of the works and attacking them in succession while the fletilla defended the river

Preparations were accordingly made to commence with the prigoda stockade and at sunrise on the 7th instant 500 bayonets were disembarked one mile below the pagoda. The men were formed in two columns of equal strength under the command of Licutenant-Colonel O Donoghue 47th and Major Basden S9th Regiment, two six pounders were landed under Captain Kennan of the Madras Artillery and Lieutenant Paton of the Bengal Artillery had charge of a small rocket battery Both columns were led with unexampled steadiness while at proper ranges a steady fire was opened from the guns and rocket battery All were exposed to a heavy fire which was kept up by the enemy to the last with a perseverance and spirit that has been seldom evinced by the Burmahs The gorges of this strong work were narrow and completely occupied by the galiant troops, who were forcing an entrance which when made good left the enemy who are reported to have been three thousand men no alternative but a passage over their own formidable defences. They were overtaken in the last abattis where they stood to fire until closed upon by the troops inside and checked by others who had run round outside in search of an entrance to the body of the work The dead the wounded and the panic struck fell in one com mon heap in and close about the abattis and when I state that of the two latter two hundred and eighty were brought in prisoners I cannot estimate the loss of the enemy in this affair at less than four hundred and fifty men Ours was about twenty killed and wounded

Rose who had received one wound fell by a second shot while persevering in the attack and shewing a gallant example to his troops Captain Cannon also of the 89th a brave and deserving officer was killed others were wounded and the loss in men extremely heavy. The party was at length directed to retire The two 8 inch mortars and four light twelve pounders from the gun boats were landed to mereuse the battery. The enemy strengthened the work, and towards evening brought more heavy guns into play It became necessary after our days loss of which a return is enclosed to consider what would be the ultimate result of the operations and although I feel confident that I could have carried the second work it would have been with a further loss which would prevent an attempt upon the main stockade and I should have been either left in a position exposed to one of superior strength or have to relinquish the post after winning it at a great sacrifice. There was another alternative, and with much regret the conviction that I should thus best forward the service induced me to adopt the measure of re embarking and occupying a position until I could receive a remforcement. The guns and stores of every description were re-shipped and after spiking the enemy's cannon and destroying the numerous gangals and other arms which had been taken the troops marched out steadily at two o clock A. M on the 8th instant and embarked with perfect regularity without any description of loss.

- 7 The wounded among the prisoners were dressed by our surgeons and as they would prove only an incumbrance the whole were permitted in the evening to go where they pleased None of the prisoners expressed a wish to return to Donabyo but they generally retired to villages to the southward
 - 8 The gallantry and perseverance displayed by the troops the cheerfulness with which they underwent the labour of bringing up heavy morturs and artillery descrie that I should mention them to you in the most favourable terms. To Lieutenant-Color el Mallet and the officers of every arm to those of the general and personal staff I am much indebted for their unabated exertions throughout this ardious day. To Lieutenant Colonel O Donogliue and Major Basken I beg to dra i your attention in the strongest way for the able manner and gallant style in which they conducted their respective columns to the points of attack at the jayout stockade.
 - 9 The flotills has dropped to Loung Joung and occupied the strong position from which it moved on the 6th instant. I have directed the wounded to be conveyed to Rangoon and have taken advantage of the opportunity to direct a further supply of provi sions to be sent when the boats return

owing to scanty means, he crossed over to the right bank of the rijer with his whole force, and on the 18th arrived at Henzada Here he halted two days, collecting carriage, and during this interval he detached a force under the command of Licutenant Colonel Godwin to attack a Buimese force under the late Governor of Bassein, which was posted a few miles off, the Burmese fled precipitately, and sustained but little loss

Resuming his march, Sir Archibald Campbell arrived before Donabyo on the 25th, opened communication with the water column, and set on foot vigorous measures for the reduction of the Burmese stronghold. The rocket and morter batteries opened fire on the 1st of April and that same day the enemy's General, Maha Bandula, was killed by either a shell or a rocket. With him the spirit of resistance of the garrison died, and next day the place was in our possession.

Extract of a despatch from Brigadier General Sii Archibald Campbell KCB do dated Lyne the 23rd February 1825

My letter of the 12th instant would inform you of the immediate advance of the different columns composing the small field force from the army under my command. The land column. under my own immediate orders, arrived here jesterday a dis tance from Rangoon by the road of fifty nine miles without having met the slightest opposition although a strong division of the enemy under Maha Thilwah waited our approach in the old Talian fort at Mophie until I had actually made my disposition for attack when it broke and dispersed into a close jungle in the The Carran inhabitants of the country through which we have passed have viewed the expulsion of the Burmese with much satisfaction, they have received us with lindness and friend hip their ruined villages and fields laid waste convince me they must be sincerely happy at the change, and I lave end recured to confirm the hope of peace they entertain by a rocksmati n which has already procured us some assistance in rice road making an I slaughter buffaloes

I have not I card directly from Briga her General Cotton since I left Bargeon but privopers inform me Paulang has be n taken with great case the Kee Woonger and his troops return, before my marine column upon Donabyo There by all accounts the whole Burness force still remains with what intention I cannot understand, for by all the rules of modern writare the position at Donabyo is turned the instant I reach the Irrawaddy either at Saraoco or Nugur The intervention of a broad and rapid stream with the want of pontions will necessarily prevent me from deriving the full advantage my situation would otherwise give me, but I shall at least prevent the Burnese army from crossing to the left bank of the river in sufficient time to cover Prome I do not of course expect to reach that point without some fighting, but to the best of my information there is nothing now in my front that could materially impede my progress

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Aichibald Campbell
Fort William No 38 dated Head Quarters, Thurawa, the 3rd March 1820

I have the honour to inform you that I yesterday reached Sarawa on the Irrawaddy a distance from Rangoon of one hundred and twelve miles without having lost one man either by sickness or otherwise, and I have great pleasure in adding the troops continue uncommonly healthy and capable of undergoing much fathere.

Letter from Brigailier General Sir Archibald Campbell KUB fr. to George Swinton Esq., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department &c &c &c Kot William dated Head Quarters Camp before Donabyo if e 29th March 1885

In my last from Sarawa dated the 3rd instant, I had the honour to report to you my uninterrupted march to that place and my very early prospect of reaching Prome if not prevented by a resistance on the part of the enemy at Donabyo which from the information I then had I had little reason to contemplate.

- 2 On the 7th instant I distinctly heard a heavy cannonade in the direction of Donabyo lasting from seven in the morning until two in the afternoon when it entirely ceased I hoped in consequence the place had fallen and the general information of the natives in the course of the night and following day tended to confirm me in that opinion I in consequence, continued my for ward movement on the 9th and reached the town of U au-dect on the 10th a distance from Sarawa of twenty six miles
- 3 On the morning of the 11th I received a few lines from Brigadier General Cotton informing me that the firing of the 7th proceeded from an attack made by him on one of the enemys outworks at Donabyo which was in a very gallant style critical with a loss to the enemy of from four hundred to five hundred men killed wounded and prisoners but that on pushing on his column for the assault of part of the principal work. he found it too strong for further perseverance and consequently withdrew his troops stating that neither le nor Captain Alexander deemed it proper to make any further attack until reinforced or hearing from me, a resolution from what I have now seen I fully ap

the cheerful assistance of every soldier, lightened all our labours and on the morning of the 18th I had the pleasure of seeing my whole force on the west bank of the river

- 6 By great labour in making roads &c I reached this place on the 25th instant and on the 27th opened a communication with the marine column.* We are now night and day employed in preparations for the reduction of Donabyo. It is commanded by Maha Bandula in person and the garrison is rated at fifteer thousand fighting men, of these ten thousand are musketeers.
 - 7 Herewith I enclose Brigadier General Cottons report to me of his late operations † and I have also the honour to forward you a despatch from Major Sale, t acquainting me with the annexa tion of the province of Bassein to our other conquests in this quarter which has deprived the enemy of all his maritime posses sions from Cape Negrais to Tenasserim I hourly expect the junction of Major Sales detachment with this force
 - A full statement of the proceedings of the Deputy Quartermaster General of the Forces serving with the army in Avaunder the command of Brygadier General Sir Archibald Campbell KCB, do on the 20th 26th and 27th days of March 1895

After the army had taken up its ground in position before the fortified post of Donabyo on the 25th March and the complete ton of the camp effected (which occurred about two o clock rm) I, as the Deputy Quartermaster General waited on the Commander of the Forces to receive his orders as to endeavouring to open communication with Brigadier General Cottons division. Sir Architald Campbell gave no definite instructions but desired me to

P'(tytroopers, with the usual proport on of non-comm s inned office s; one subal tern and fifty rank and file (with the regulated proportion of commiss oned and non-commiss oned officers) of the 26th Natire Infantry proceed. I accordingly moved out of camp about three o clock P M with the escort specified in the margin accompanied by Captain Montgomerie Brigade Major to the Artillery who particularly to the causily part of the escort exceedingly difficult and obliged us to ascend trees to see that we proceeded in the correct direction On going about three hundred vards through this kind of ground we came upon an open spot where there was a field en trenchment of the enemy evidently extending to the outworks of the principal stockade On examining this and the ground in advance which was evidently as difficult, if not more so to pene trate as that we had already advanced through and finding the day very considerably advanced and not knowing exactly how far we might have to travel before we could reach the flotilla and adverting to the difficulty of finding our way through such a country in the night should I allow myself to be benighted I suggested to Captain Montgomerie the expediency of our return ing to camp immediately and renewing the attempt early next morning so that we might have the whole day before us and preclude the possibility of any accident occurring by our being out at night That officer concurring in opinion with me we returned to camp On my arrival I reported the whole of the above particulars to Sir Archibald Campbell and proposed that the attempt should be made the next morning as soon after daylight as possible He observed that I had better proceed with a stronger escort and proposed to send two hundred Europeans from the 38th Foot and one hundred sepoys leaving it to me to take such escort of cavalry as I might deem a lyisable I observed that from the nature of the country it would be very desirable to take the three elephants we had in camp for the purpose of beating down the high reed grass. In this suggestion he was pleased to acquiesce

- 3 A little before sunset on the 25th Sir Archibald Campbell schor me and gave me a letter for Brigadier General Cotton, dearing me at the same time to urge in the strongest manner the necessity for a junction of the two columns particularly as that under his own immediate command was in very great distress for provisions the whole of which was nearly expended and the quantity of spirits totally consumed with the exception of one days supply. I stated I think to the Brigadier General that next in the strongest manner point out the very serious exils that were likely to accure from it e slightest delay being allowed to exist in effecting a meeting of the two divisions.
- 4 Oring to the attack made on the camp about nine o clock r w of the night of the 25th by a large body of the Burmere arm; and which kept the troops under arms until midnight I privations such as required relief Captain Chads of His Majesty's ship Arachne was present at the time

- 5 After a little further desultory conversation it was deter med that an advance should be made on the following day 27th March Matters having thus been arranged with Brigadier General Cotton, I went to the I mma gun vessel and consulted on different subjects with Lieutenvat-Colonel Tidy, the Deputy Adjutant General to the force In the course of conversation it was stated that an increase to my escort had been proposed I disclaimed the necessity for anything of the kind considering it fully adequate to every purpose in a country where we could act
- 6 Things having been thus settled and the men of the scort having refreshed themselves and the European portion of it having received an extra dram I prepared about half past one oclock to return. While in this act Captain Montgomene came to me and mentioned that he regretted having omitted to mention to me that a signal had been previously concerted between Lieute nant Colonel Hopkinson and himself under the sanction of Six Archibald Campbell to be fired on our communeation with Brigadier General Cotton being effected. This was accordingly made known to the latter officer by me and we prepared to move off on our return to camp
- 7 After leaving the river side about ten minutes the above signal was fired and a movement made by a part of the flotilla to draw off the attention of the enemy from our line of march. We pursued the same line of road nearly keeping somewhat more inland than on advancing. On arriving opposite the White Pagoda stockade not a soul was to be seen and the most perfect silence prevailed. I at the time observed to some officers near me—I do not at present exactly recollect who—that there was something in store for us from the absence of the great body of the Burnese force from that stockade.
- 8 We proceeded steadily forward and as we approached the high reed grass the elephants took the advance with three European soldiers on each the leading section following in angie file the remainder of the party coming up in succession. When we had proceeded about three hundred yards to a spot where the reed jungle was less thick and we had to go through a patch of confused woody jungle on the elephants entering this a fire was opened upon them and they naturally becoming alarmed jurned immediately to the right about which caused a momentary confusion but the malouts got the command of the main took them to the rear a short distance. The firing increasing all rout us, the front section was formed and Captain Wilson of Ilis Majesty's 28th who commanded the party came to me and asked in the morning and he himself to proceed up the left bank with a party and two guns

- 13 Seeing the advantage of the Brigadier General's suggestion, I requested steps might be taken for crossing the whole party, and Leutenant Colonel Tidy, Deputy Adjutant General, kindly undertook to superintend the crossing during my absence having gone on towards the Limina gun vessel to refresh myself after the fitigues of the day, having been up the greater part of the might before. By sunset every man of the party had left the right bank together with the horses and deplants
- 14 During the evening Colonel Tidy suggested to me that it would be better for me to proceed up the river in the Pinma, allowing the excert to proceed with Captain Wilson, as my having seen the river up abrest of the main stockade I might be of great assistance to the master of that vessel in pointing out what I might conceins to be the best channel for a vessel of her draught of water.
- 15 I immediately agreed to do so particularly when I thought my compliance would be attended with advantage to the public service
- 16 About eight o clock AM on the 27th March having a tolerably steady breeze from the south west though rather scanty sail was made on the Emma and the anchor hove up at about the same time the steamboat with Captains Alexander and Chads of the Royal Navy on board prepared to move with the Trom Fought on her larboard saide and some other boats is tow, the light cutters and other men of war boats leading the van Brigadier General Cotton had proceeded earlier in the morning to the post he intended to occupy
- 17 About nine o clock the usual morning fog began to clear up and the works of the stockades were seen well mained Shortly after, as we approached the works a heavy but ill directed fire was opened upon us which was answered by the rockets from the stemboat and shells from the Tom Tough the distance yet being too great for the carronades of the Emina being used with any effect. We thus proceeded until we got abreast of the river face of the great stockade when the firing uncreased and was somewhat better. The guas of the Limna were now become useful and they were well served by the borts crew of the Voirra transport attached to the Commander of the I orces. While the vessels were proceeding up I observed a battery hid opered to enflued the river. See on the left of our camp and in advance and that on the left bank had opened its fire. About one of elec-

everything ceased and the vessels were safely anchored in the stream opposite the British camp

Despatch from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell
KCB &c. to George Swinton Esq Secretary to Govern ment, Secret and Political Department &c &c Fort William dated Head Quarters Donabyo the 2nd April

My despatch of the 29th ultimo would inform you of my nitival in front of Donabyo as well as of my motives for having retraced my steps to that place. I have now the honour to acquaint you that the fort and different redoubts fell into our hands this morning with all the ordnance stores depote &c, &c having been evacuated and abandoned by the enemy in the course of last night, and it affords me great satisfaction to add that this important point has been gained with a very trifling loss on our natt.

2. I found the fort of Donabyo much too extensive to be surrounded by my small force and although fully awar of the great importance of every hour of the declining season of military operations I preferred the loss of time to the loss of lives and resolved to take advantage of our means and science in the reduction of the place I in consequence ordered some heavy guas and mortars to be brought up and landed and with much laborious exertion on the part of all employed our mortar and enfilleding batteries were opened yesterday, and the breaching batteries had just commenced their fire at daylight this morning when the enemy a small rear guard was discovered in full retreat towards the jungle The place was immediately taken possession of and in addition to the long list of guas &c found on the works we have taken grananes and depote of grain sufficient for the consumption of this force for many months. All the wounde I and sick found in the place join with the deserters who lave come in in positively asserting the death of Miha Bandula, and from the Creumstantial manner in which the story is told by all I can have no doubt of the fact. He is said to have been killed by a rocket while going his rounds yesterday morning and no currently of the other chiefs could prevail upon the already panic struck garrison to remain longer together. They have fied through the jungle in the direction of Lamina and I have reason to hope fow of them will agric appear in arms against us

3 During the siege the enemy made several bold and desperate sorties on our line but were on all occasions quickly repulsed. In one of the see sorties a seene at once novel and interesting presented itself in font of both armies seventeen large elephants each carrying a complement of armed men and supported by a column of manity were observed moving down towards our right flank. I directed the Body Guard, under Captrian Sneyd to charge them and they acquitted themselves most hundsomely mixing boldly with the elephants they shot their riders off their backs and finally drove the whole back into the fort. On this occasion I also observed the energy and activity of the Bengal Horse Artillery and Rocket Troop under Captains Graham at Jamisden as very conspicuous.

Return of Lilled wounded and missing of the army under the command of Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B.,&c in the operations before Donabyo from the 35th of March to the 1st of April 1825

Extract of a despatch f om Brigalier General Sir Archibald Campbell LCB do dated Prome the Cil June 1825

A day or two before I arrived at Donabyo I sent Lieute nant-Colonel Godwin with a strong detachment of horse foot and artillery to make a night attack upon a large body of the enemy about eighteen or twenty miles from Henzado where the advance of my force then lay Ihe Lacutenant-Colonel came up with them by daylight but the vigilance of the enemy saved them from destruction by just having time to break and risk into the ji glo as the British advance commenced the attack as it was a fixe of the enemy were killed about twenty three made preveners in arms and a great muny arms spears & destroyed 5 to my arrival here the same gallant officer has trivered it wards of so a I under along anto the cemys country at the lead of a large detachment. Captain Sneytl as also been actively and beneficially employed from head quarters

As soon as Donabyo was captured, Sir Archibald Campbell, leaving a suitable garrison to hold that place, again pushed forward towards Prome, and on the 9th April once more reached Tharawa. On the 20th he was in Tarrip Myo, thirty miles from Prome, and at this place he received a letter from the Prince of Tharawadi, containing proposals for peace. Replying that he was ready to treat, Sir Archibald continued to move forward, and on the 25th occupied Prome without resistance, only in time to save the town from being burnt, the Prince of Tharawadi abandoning the place with his troops and without making any further attempt to enter on negociations for peace.

Soon after the occupation of Prome, Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin was detached in command of a small reconnoitring force to Tonghú, the chief town of the province of Tharawadi The difficulties of the ioute and the want of supplies induced Colonel Godwin to stop short before reaching that place Turning to the left, he visited Maday, on the Irrawadi, sixty miles above Prome, and returned to the latter place on the 24th, without having seen a single enemy.

The following reports and despatches contain the particulars of the movements above alluded to —

Letter from Brigadier-General S.: Archibald Cumpbell, K.C.B., dc., to George Stiinton, Esq., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, dc., Fost William, No 12, dated Head-Quarters, Sarrawah, the 9th April evertions of the borts of His Majesty's Navy under Lieuten ant S nith of His Majesty's Ship Alligator sent on by Captain Alexander to superintend the passage of the river I had these two corps crossed over to Sarrawah in the course of the day. The rest of the force has since been arriving and crossing in succession and I trust by the day after to morrow the whole will be over

- 3 The enemys late large force stationed at Donabjo continues dispersing in small bands all over the country. The death of Maha Bandula, as already stated appears by the concurring testimony of the flying enemy and local authorities most fully confirmed.
- 4 Notwithstanding the severe duties the force has lately had to perform its state of health I am happy to say is excellent. The heat by day is very oppressive and the common pals used by European soldiers affords little protection from the sin but the deserted state of the town and villages has hitherto enabled me to put the troops very generally under cover and to this I ascribe in a great measure their healthy state. When however the inhabit ants choose to remain in their houses I shall take care they are not interfered with in the occupation of them.
- 5 Brigadier General Cotton whom I left at Donubyo for a couple of days delivered the enclosed report to me yesterday and many more discoveries in g ins stores &c are yet expected to be made
- 6 By Brigadier General Cotton and all the officers embarked on the flotilla the zeal and incessant labour of the navy is men tonced in terms of high a limit on and it affords me much plasure to forwar! to you the high and honourable testimony borne by Captain Alexander senior naval officer with this force to the mentionous services and restrious displayed by the Hon ble Company's gun boats and flotilla
- 7 Here I was yesterdy, joined by Brigad er M Creagh with the battelion companies of His Majesty's Rojal Regiment and the 28th Native Infantry from Rangoon with the tret supply of elephants sent to this force. The second supment of the so an mals twelve an number (one died) under except of the 70th Nadras Native Infantry I expect will join me in the course of a very f v days.
- 8 These arrivals will prove a most trucky and to our Commissariat D partment

Letter from Brigadier-General Willoughby Cotton, to Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B., &c., Cammander of the Forces, dated Sarrawah, the 8th April 1825.

In obedience to the commands you did me the honour to leave with me on your moving with the advance of the army on the morning of the 3rd ultimo,* I beg leave to acquaint you that I caused the pagoda and two other outer stockades to be totally destroyed on the 4th, withdrawing by working parties all the guns and iinials that were in the works A very large quantity of cuppowder blew up in various directions on the stockades being fired The breastwork has been filled up, which extended on the left flank of the main work. Inventories of stores have been taken, all the muskets broken, and directions given for the cannon to be placed on the bank of the river in park, ready for embarkation, and to be forwarded by return boats to Rangoon when opportunity may occur. I beg to mention that several brass guns have been discovered not included in the report made to you, that were buried, and I received information the day before I quitted Donabyo that guns and stores of every description had been thrown into the tank in the fortress the night they evacuated the place.

- 2. I have apprised Lieutenant-Colonel Conry of this, with distributions immediately to ascertain the point. I have left the Madras European Regiment, with 350 of the 22nd Native Infantry and a detail of artillery, in garrison, which I hope you will approve of, and desired the Lieutenant-Colonel in command to forward with the least possible delay every reinforcement of men and provisions to your army. In order to forward this most essential service, I have left with the Lieutenant-Colonel a sum of money to enable him to pay the beatmen instantly, and also the natives who bring in provisions.
 - I have also, by your instructions, required that every conciliation may be used to the inhabitants, and I have no hesitation in saying I am confident he will find every supply willingly brought.
 - Letter from Captain T. Alexander, R.N., Senior Naval Officer, to Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B., d.c., dated on board How'ble Company's steam vessel "Diana," off Tharauca, the 9th April 1825.

The conduct of the Hon'ble Company's Flotilla I have the honour to command has been such as to merit my warmest praise, supplies of any kind our line of march on this bank of the Irra widdle is jet unmarked by any act of hostility since we left Rangoon.

Prome is reported fortified and said to be occupied by a large force but in every way so much dispirited that I trust either by treaty or force of arms, to take possession of the place without much difficulty

From Lieutenant Colonel Smelt at Rangoon my accounts are most satisfactory. The chiefs of Syriam and Dallah had solin tarily come in and made their submission. Others were expected to follow their example, and reports although unsupported by postitic authority at the that the Siamese army is again in march towards Martaban having only been recalled in consequence of an appricheded insurrection in some part of Siam. up arms in a hopeless cause or drove them into the jungles with their families to lead a life of wretcheduess and want

Letter from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, KCB, §c to George Swinton Leg Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department dc, Fort William, dated Head Quarters Prome, the End May 1825

It affords me the greatest pleasure to forward for the information of the Right Hon ble the Governor General in Gouncil, another instance of the seal and judgment with which Captain Alexander, commanding the flotills has uniformly co operated with me on this service and another proof if any such were wanting of the gallauty spirit and enterprise displaced on all occasions by that part of His Muesty's Navy serving on this expedition.

- 2 It has now been proved to me beyond a doubt that strong reinforcements in troots and thirty pieces of cannon were within a short march of Prone when I took possession of it. These troops have now very generally dispersed and the guns taken 1y the men of wars boats are, no doubt part of those intended for the defence of this place.
- ? Prince Sarrawaddy is nettring direct upon the capital with the remnant of his people, disolation marks his trick and the meanest cottage does not except the meen hary a torch Promy and decisive measures alone saved Prots from the general confligration and its inhabitants from a wretel d fate. They, with their Much (ivid governor) at their lead have very generally returned to their houses and received the kindest reception, nor shall the proud characteristic of our country be forgotten, in extending shelter and protection to the suffering families that have been wantonly exposed to the inclemency of an approaching monsoon, by the harbarous policy of their own countrymen.

Letter from Captain T Alexander, H1s Mayesty's Ship "Alligaton, Commanding in the river Irrawaddy to Brigadier-General Sii Archibald Campbell, KCB, &c dated on board Honble Company's steam ressel "Diana," off Prome, the 2nd May 1825

I have great satisfaction in informing you that the light division of men of war boats under the command of Lieutenant Wilkinson of His Majesty's Ship Luffey (whom I sent to reconneite up the river on the 27th ultimo) returned last night, having succeeded after a long chase in capturing and destroying five of the enemy's large war boats pulling from fifty to sixty oars with their arms and ammunition and bringing down three others with their guis, &c. is also a boat laden with thirteen guis of different calibres, junjals, five hundred and twenty spears, and destroying the same number

2 This service has been performed under the greatest fatigue from the great strength of the current which kept the boats under a heavy fire from five hundred musketeers and fifty horse under the command of the Prince of Sarrawaddy, who was retreating near the left bank near Toundam destroying the villages, grain, and boats of every description. The capture of the war boats hiberated three thousand boats and cances with families, they were driving before them, and all the people claimed protection and returned with Lieutenant Wilkinson, many of which are lying on the opposite side of the river, waiting for passes to thur villages below.

3 I am happy to state this service has been performed with out a casualty, four of the enemy were found killed, as the boats returned. The boats got up to Mecadan, a distance of between fifty and sixty miles, at some of the rapids they did not pull a boats length in an hour

- Letter from Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, KCB, dc, to George Swinton, Leq, Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, dc Fort William dated Head-Quarter Prome the 9th May 1825
- It affords me the utmost satisfiction to acquaint you that perfect tranquitty exists in this part of the country, and the re inforcements that were on the road from Ava for the defence of this place have retraced their steps with the utmost precipi tance, nor am I aware of any force of the enemy being now betwint me and the capital
- 2 The inhabitants of Prome are returning from the jungles in tast numbers and I trust soon to see a plentiful hazar established. The governors of the surrounding districts are also coming in to offer their submission and placing themselves and their districts under our protection. One has already given me up nine elephants belonging to the State and I am promised by the same person ten more. Another has brought me in five guns some juniuls and a few muskets, and all make fair promises of affording me every aid in their power. I have therefore little doubt of being able to keep my troops well supplied. They are already pretty generally under cover and I very soon hope to have the essential comfort completed. The weather has been had for the last week and to all appearance the monsoon has commenced and at a much earlier provided than usual.
- 3. We have suffered some small loss in the ruce by the overstring and immediate sinking (in a heavy squall) of two of the gun flottlla, the Sophia and the Swift the former louded with native provisions and the latter with ordivance and stores, but I am not without hopes that some of the latter may \(\tau \text{the provisions}\) the recovered. gaining information of this unknown country, and ascertaining what its real resources were left. Prome on the 5th instant, and continued its route cast by north till the 11th.

The troops having got into a mountainous country, with heavy roads want of water the probability of the mouseon and the total absence of all supplies in this almost uninhabited country, determined me to change my route. Previously to this however, I halted the troops and proceeded with a small escort accompanied by Captain White Assistant Quartermaster General and Captain Snodgrass your Militury Secretary, to gain the summit of the range to see what the country appeared on the other side At the end of twelve miles we arrived at a spot where we saw an immense tract of interminable forest without, to the eye a dwelling

The route was now changed to the left west and by north in the direction of the forthfiel town of Meeaday situated sixty miles north of Prome on the Irrawaddy and this we reached on the 17th and found it totally destroyed. The country on this line, after we had descended the hills was in most instances beautiful pasture or cultivated land with a great deal of plantation the rouds very good but without resource, not a grain of rice to be had, the villages burnt and destroyed, and the people mostly living in their hack-eries in the jungle. From Meeaday we turned directly south and reached Prome on the 23rd making a circuit of one hundred and thirty nine miles.

I have the honour to state that in the whole of this march not in enemy was seen. The villages were all destroyed till our reaching about twenty five miles from Prome. The inhabitants where we met with them, appeared in perfect confidence of good treatment and in several instances received at their request protection. Your proclamation always, satisfied them. The disinclination to part with their cattle or carriago was universal though they have been agreeably to your instructions most liberally paid for and all that ability possessed by Captain. Jones of the Madras Commissanation which you Sir are so well aware has been put to the test in procuring the supply he has brought in amounting to about six hundred head of cittle. The grain is all taken away and nothing is to be expected either in supply or cover for the troops after twenty five miles north of Prome. The roads are very good on the route to the north.

Captain White Assistant Quartermaster General of the Madras Division has surveyed and lind down the features of the country and all local information has been most ably 'obtained and the detachiment has been conducted without unnecessary fatigue by the indefatigable exertions of this officer

OPERATIONS IN AVA,-JULY TO DECEMBER 1825.

The death of Maha Bandula and the capture of Donabyo and Prome now for the first time made the Court of Ava despair of success in the contest in which they were engaged with the British Government. This feeling of despair was, however, evanescent. The exhortations of a party amongst the ministers who were in favour of the war restored hopes of ultimate success, and measures were taken to raise fresh armies to oppose the "white strangers." Liberal bounties were offered to the native Burmese to induce them to enlist, and the Shans, a brave and warlike tribe in the north of Ava. tributary to the Government of Amarapura, were summoned to join the standard of the Empire. Soon a force of 40,000 men was assembled at Miaday, Paghamyo, Melloon and Patanagoh, on the Irrawadi, while 12,000 were collected at Toughu. The command of these troops was entrusted to Prince Memia-Boh, a half-brother to the King. who established his head-quarters at Miaday. To meet this array, Sir Archibald Campbell could muster only 5,000 men, though 1,500 more were en route to join him from Rangoon. How the British troops were disposed, and the general state of affairs at this time (the middle of August 1825), will appear from the following documents :---

The General found the enemy as my information stated in considerablt force—he thinks from sixteen to twenty thousand men apparently well armed and with a large proportion of artillety—busily entrenching his position already tolerably strong by nature.

The total of this army I have reason to think upon the most moderate calculation will not fall short of forty thousand men under the chief command of a half brother of the King named Memceaboo second Commander in Chief of the Burmees army since the death of Bandula the intermediate one having been put to death soon after his elevation by order of the King on suspicion of revolutionary principles

Besides the army which I have stated I am aware that the Court of Ata is making other preparations of considerable magnitude for the ensuing crunpaign. The season here has been upon the whole very mild but the Irrawaddy (from the effect of the melting of the snow and mountain torrents) has been to a very great height overflowing its banks everywhere that it is not bounded by high ground to the waters edge, the low grounds are in consequence at present utterly impassable especially for artillery as "secretained by a reconnoissance which I ordered for that purpose under the orders of the Deputy Quartermaster General of the Madras Division.

If the enemy remain quiet at Meeaday it would perhaps be better to allow him to be so rather than harass the men by re turning again to quirters until the season will admit of the opening of the campring for a continuance of it. But should he commence to detach by either of my flants which his numbers will easily enable him to do and mine too few to prevent. I shall be obliged, the instant the state of the roads will at all enable me to move to do so and endeavour to bring him to a general nection.

My present force fit for duty at head quarters, will be seen on reference to the return small to be sure—but with it I antice pate every success, such is my confidence in the gallant treeps I have so often had the honour to lead into action

The stockade at Donabyo is almost in total ruin all round from the swelling of the heavy mounds of earth thrown up to support the large wooleu i rights (or duynes). I therefore inter I giving it up altogether as a military post ordering the 22nd Mad ras Native Infantry no chiefly it aftered it ere immediately to join the head quarters here as also the 12th Regiment of Mudray Native Infantry (the corps which I d tacked in the last campa grawth May r Sale to Bassein) from Hangeon. my force) I intend to withdraw from that place to Rangoon leav ing there a detachment of from one to two hundred men mereli for the police of the country This I am induced to do from the excellent disposition shewn by the centendars in that part of the country, together with my confidence (I hope not a mis placed one) in the true and sincere offer of union made by the Siamese, and lastly the placing a force at my disposal at Rangoon either to join the head quarters in advance or to check any movement the enemy may seem disposed to make by Tonghoo The force to be kept thus disposable will consist of the 3rd and 34th Regiments of Native Light Infantry and the Honble Com panys 1st Madras European Regiment now at Donabio. in strength from about two hundred and fifty to three hundred raul and file On the whole of these corns being ordered to leave Rangoon the garrison of that place will be made to consist of about two thousand men composed of the 9th Madras Native Infantry, a proportion of detachments hourly expected from Madras amounting in all to about eighteen hundred men (native infantry) besides which there will be there available all men recovered from hospitals &c

At present Brigadier Smelt his two hundred native infantry (from the 9th) at Pegu. The 34th Light Infantry I intend order ing thither immediately under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Pepper of the Madras army an officer whose character on that establishment stands high for many good military qualities. The detachment of the 9th will then of course return to Rangoon. Brigadier Smelt his also a small detachment at Bassein no longer required them. It will also return to Rangoon and its commander Captain lensured in officer upon whose experience and capability of arrangement I can ruly I shall order to Martaban in command for the purpose of communicating with the Samese.

peopl. Leec of arms alone can only bring them to any such bearing. That ultimor ratio I feel to be now near at hand, in the result of which I have not no express my sanguine hopes of success from the determined valour and decipling of the force I have the hopping to command.

Report from Brigatier-General Willoughby Cotton, to Beigadier-General Sie Architald Compbell, KOB, &c., Commander of the Porter, dated Prome, the 16th August 1525

I have the honour to report that, agreeably to the instructions I received. I proceeded with fifty men of the Royal Regiment, on the morning of the 19th ultimo, in the steam boat, up the river, to recommute the position the enemy occupied.

We discerned them on the morning of the 15th at Mecaday on the left bank of the river, distant from hence about forty miles. A large suitible time into the Irraweldy immediately below Mecadas, from the point of which they were ranged, to the extent of a mile and a half up the bank of the river. This bank has rever all pagod's upon it for the most part near the nullah, all of which they were stockading and had entrenched and they had thrown a ditch and by astwork between them and the river, to protect their bots, which were ranged underscath

In our progress of passing their line of defence, they opened sixteen guns of different enlibres from three and four to six pounders, upon us, but as the width of the river is at least fifteen hundred vards, their shot full short

The force they displayed I estimate at the least to be between from sixteen to twenty thousand men, and appeared to be all armed with muskets and I counted twenty golden chattaks. They had also a small force on the right bank, with junyals, opposite the right of their line, as it freed the riner On our cutum I disengaged the gun boats I had in tow to cannonade their line and make them develop their whole force, and it was then ascertained they had an advance across the nullid I have named, thrown on the road nading to Frome, and occupying some pagodas which overlook it which they were stockading. This party were working also on a breastwork on the side of the hill, which would also command the road. Three golden chattaks were visible with this force.

Having fully ascertained these points, I proceeded back to this place to make my report accordingly.

PS-I should conceive they have at Meeaday four hundred boats, but I saw only one regular war-boat

Report from Captain S. W. Steel, Deputy Quartermanter-General, Madras Dicinion, to Major Jackson, Deputy Quartermanter-General to the Expedition, dated Prone, the 17th August 1825.

I have the honour to report to you, for the information of the Commander of the Forces, the progress of the reconnoitring detachment which he did me the honour to place under my orders, and which, in conformity with the instructions from you, dated the 12th instant, moved on the following morning.

13th August .- The first day's march was to the village of Na-tu-leep, the distance estimated to be about nine miles. The read was tolerable until after the passage of the Loth-ho nullah. immediately beyond which is a swamp about five hundred yards wide. Heavy guns could be passed over this nullah by a strong bridge. The swamp was deep, and the soil tenacious, opposing a very serious obstacle to every description of loaded cattle, and quite impassable by guns. Foot passengers can cross the swamp by a bridge (nearly rained) which extends completely over it. From this place the regular road was so bad as to induce the guides to lead the party over the bridges between fields of paddy. which were rugged, slippery, and interrupted occasionally by a deen bog, caused by the draining of the water from one field to the next. This description of path continued, with little variation, until the Nawam nullah was reached and forded at about the depth of three-feet-and-a-half. The party encamped on the right bank of the nullah, close to the village of Na-tile-len. The provisions arrived at 3 P. u., the bullocks having been assisted across the swamp by fifty Burmans, and the gunnies brought over the nullah in canoes.

benziek, but as the road leads into the former village, and there is a nullah between them, nearly impassable, I determined on halting at Mee boo. The distance marche I about ten miles

The intelligence here procured of the enemy's position and intentions is as follows. That Maha Thilua the Lee Woongie and Suddawoon are at Mecadas with their respective forces hyankyamboo has his her l-quarters at Moroon a place described to be one core east of Mecaday whence he has resued ord re for a movement upon Prome by the road which the kee Woongro took in his retriat. The Chuddawoon is to command a body that will move on the right bank of the river towards Puddawn while the other chiefs come by water I despatched two men to a village two coss north east of Mee boo, where similar intelligence was procured, and it was stated that no movement had taken place Mynyaboo the Lings brother in law is said to be at Memboo The inland route which the party pursued having been adopted from the reported impracticability of the road by the river side enquiries were male respecting a route further east which does exist but was stated to be too circuitous and too full of the im pediments incidental to the season to authorise my quitting the road by which the party had advanced and which would under other circumstances have been that of their return The loads upon the provision bullocks were equalized in preparation for longer marches 16th August—The d tachment marched to Dayho where it remained till the evening where as the Nawain nullah is very liable to overflow the whole moved across and encamped on the left hank.

17th August —The party returned to Prome the roads and paths in much better condition but the swamp as difficult of passage as before

WHILE thus preparing for the renewal of hostilities as soon as the cessation of the monsoon would admit of it, the British commander was not unmindful of the instructions with which he was charged by the Govern. ment, to lose no favourable opportunity of bringing the war to a termination. In accordance with those instructions, about the end of August 1825, he addressed a letter to the ministers of the Burmese Monarch, intimating that he was authorised to enter on negociations for a peace, and advising them to take measures to avert the disasters which must inevitably befall the dominions of their master if they persisted in continuing the war. A prompt reply was received, proposing that a mission should be sent to Prince Memia-Boh, to state the terms on which peace might be concluded. This was done; and Licutenant-Colonel Tidy, the Deputy Adjutant-General of the British Force, and Lieutenant Smith, R.N., were deputed to the Burmese head-quarters at Miaday. They were cordially received, and, as a preliminary measure, an armistice for one month from the 17th September was agreed upon. On the 2nd October. in pursuance of arrangements made, Sir Archibald Campbell and Commodore Sir James Brisbane (who had recently arrived and taken up the duties of Commanderin-Chief of the Naval Porces in the East Indies) met the Burmese Commissioners at Nathenzeik, and discussion received, they proposed that the armstice should be extended to the beginning of November As operations could not well be begin until then, this proposal was acceded to, and the Commissioners parted

During this lull in the prosecution of the war, the following despatch was addressed by Sir Archibald Campbell to the Government of India —

KCB &c to George Swinton Esq Secretary to Govern

ment Secret and Political Department &c, &c, &c dated

Prome the 11th October 1805

No movement of importance in advance of the line of de marcation* appears to have been made by the enemy succe I closed my devpatch of yesterday and as this apparent inactivity may perhaps arise from indecision or difference of opinion among the Burmese Commissioners I have seized the opportunity it affords of addressing a letter to them which will I trust draw some explanation from them of their present extraordinary conduct

If hostilities must be renewed it appears in a great measure immaterial whether the enemy attacks me in my lines at Prome or awaits my attack in his position at Meeaday in either case I trust the result will not be doubtful

To prevent his throwing the main body of his urmy into the Kingdom of Pegu (which common tactics points out as his surest line of defensive operations) at present occupies all my attention and against even that contingency I hope to provide without materially retarding my advance upon his equital

In a former communication I detailed to you the strength of the column now forming at Pegn under Liei tenant Colonel Pepper and to which I have since added a very strong wing of the 12th Madris Native Infantry insuring I trust an uninter rupted advance on that line and the ultimate reduction of the city of Tought

In addition to the above force I now purpose forming another column at Rangoon to be composed of the second wing of the 12th Native Infantry the European corps expected from Madra+ and numerous native and European details armed or duly expected from that Presidency. The dismounted troops of the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General's Body-Guard are also about to proceed to Rangoon, to await the arrival of Captain Sneyd with the remount horses for the corps, when they will prove a valuable acquisition to the field force to be assembled there, and for the command of which I will send an officer of rank and experience from the force at Prome.

From the comparative mildness of the late monsoon, I expect this column will be able to move by the end of November, and its commander will receive such instructions from me as the development of the enemy's designs may, from time to time, seem to require

PS—It will be gratifying to the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council to know that I am rapidly completing my artillery and commissariat in draught and carriage cattle, and by the end of the month we will, I trust, be provided in both departments to the extent required

As time wore on without any communication from the Burmese Commissioners on the subject of the restoration of peace, the feeling began to be generally entertained that the Government of Ava were not sincere, and that recourse to arms would once more be necessary; and this view was confirmed when the reply was at last received, on the 1st November, a few hours before the expiration of the armistice. It was then stated that if the British Government really desired peace, their army must retire from Burmese terutory and then solicit terms, and that no demands for payment of money or cession of territory could be listened to. The Court of Ava land indeed been roused to the highest pitch of anger on hearing the terms proposed, and ordered the instant renewal of hostilities. Operations became argently necessary. A force of four regiments of Madras Native Infantry was accordingly detached for this purpose, under the command of Lacutement-Colonel M'Dowall

himself falling in the engagement

Encouraged by this success, the Burmese army, under Maha Nemian advanced on Prome and took up positions at Simbike, Napadi and Shire dong, and began their operations by attacking a British post at Padoung, which wis held by a detachment of the 1st Foot, who repelled every effort of the enemy to dislodge them stant skirmislies took place up to the 30th November, and during these operations the enemy were turned out of the position they had taken up at Shwe dong On the 1st December Sir Archibald Campbell assumed the offensive, attacked the Burmese left at Simbike, and totally defeated them, killing 300 of them, including the veteran On the 2nd the enemy's right at Malia Neminu Napadı was vigorously attacked, and with a similar result On the 5th the enemy were again defeated on the banks of the Irrawadi by Brigauier General Cotton These repeated overthrous broke up the Burmese army, the Shan portion descriting and retiring to their homes Archibald Campbell immediately advanced in pursuit, and on the 19th December occupied Mindry without Pushing on, he reached Loongyi on the 26th, and here he was met by a flag of truce from the Kye Wungyi with proposals for peace | Feeling he would be in a better position to negociate at Patanagoli, opposite the fortified post of Melloon, Sir Archibald took up his position there on the 20th December, and the next day the negociations for peace were resumed

in the following despitches and reports -

Despatch from Br gadier General Sir Archibald Lampball KCB &c to George Swinton Eng Secretary to Government Secret and Political Department &c &c &c deed Prome the 16th November 1895

I have now the honour to acquaint you for the information of the Right Hon ble the Covernor General in Council that I will move forward at the head of the first division of the army tomorrow morning, the rest of the force following me on the two subsequent days. I regret to say that my intention of making a last appeal to the Burmese Commissioners, previous to recommencing hostilities, has been unfortunately frustrated by late aggressions on the part of the enemy, and is for the present unavoidably laid aside.

A party of reconnoisance from the 22nd Native Infantry having moved, some days since, a few miles in front of our advanced posts, were met by a party of the enemy, which instantly fired upon them; and although Lueutenant Bird, who commanded the native infantry, had the forbearance not to return the fire, he was subsequently attacked by a considerable body of Shans and compelled to retire, skirmishing with the enemy. His Lordship in Council will therefore, I trust, agree with me that while so marked a disposition to war is manifested, it would be equally vain and injurious to urge our demands with anything but force

The enemy having pushed forward a division of his army upon the road by which we will advance, to within a few miles of Prome, and it appearing desirable that our columns should not be harassed and delayed at the very commencement of our march, I yesterday directed Colonel M'Dowall, of the Madras army, to move forward with four regiments of Madras native infantry and dislodge the enemy from his posts.

The troops will, I hope, return to camp to-night or to-morrow morning, and the Colonel's report will be herewith transmitted.

I have embarked his Majesty's Royal Regiment, made up to nearly seven hundred strong, under the command of Brigadier Armstrong, on bord the footila; and the zeal and very cordual and courteous disposition of His Excellency Commodore Sir James Brisbane insure to me every possible and and assistance from our marine column of attack.

The corps at Pegu under Colonel Pepper will, I trust, be able to move forward early in December, and the one from Rangoon about the latter end of that month.

I purpose leaving a brigade of native infantry and a considerable number of convalescents to garrison this place.

Despatch from Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Campbell, KOB, &c. to George Swinton, Etq., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c., &c., &c., dated Prome, the 18th November 1823.

In vontinuation of my letter of the 16th instant, I much rigget to state, for the information of the Right Hon'ble the Governor General in Council that the important movement therein contemplated could not be carried into effect owing to the enemy's superior force and the strength of his position

The point upon which the different corps were directed to more was the village of Watty goon distant from Prome twenty miles where my information led me to suppose a body of only two thousand five hun leed Shans and Burnese were assembled and from the easterly position they had chosen with the appariate purpose of hirasing our right flink in advancing or of failing into our rear annoying the garrison of Prome and endeavouring to intercept our communication with that place

For the purpose of dislodging this force (as I did myself the honour of stating) I placed two brigades of Madras native infuntry under the command of Colonel MDowall directing him to approach the enemys position at Watty good with three regiments of native infantry so as to assail his left fails while Major Elans with the 22nd Native Infantry was ordered to move upon the front of the position and to attack in concert with the name body. I also moved forward the 18th Native Infantry to the ground left by the 22nd to be in readiness to afford support to the latter corps if required. The uncertain state of the roads and country did not permit of the columns being accompanied by artillet.

The 22nd Native Infantry came upon the enemys position at Watty goon and Vajor Evans from the fixing on his right considering Color el M Do valls column in the act of attacking, gallinuly moved forward to take his share in the engagement but finding himself mistaken on that point and the enemy much too numerous and strongly posted to be assaulted by a single regiment, he deemed it prudent to retire which appears to have been done with steadness and regularity

The column under Colonel M Dowall's immediate command approached the position of Watty goon by the left flank as direct ed and reached that point after a sharp conflict with the enemys troops in advance but the apparent strength of the position and I is very superior numerical force did not in the opinion of the senior officers without an assault with the means at their disposal and a retreat was determined on in the course of which the 38th Native Infantry which had been delayed by unforeseen and unto vard circumstances came in nost opportunely upon the enemys flank and materially checked his following up our retreating column

I have to lament the loss of a good and worthy officer in Licutenant-Colonel Commandant M'Dowall and several other brave officers and soldiers as will appear by the list of killed and wounded; but it affords me peculiar satisfaction to observe, by the concurring testimony of the officers employed and the official reports of commanding officers, herewith transmitted, that the troops engaged conducted themselves with that steadiness and valour which has ever eminently distinguished the sepoys of the Madras army.

Despatch from Major R. Lacy Evans, Commanding 22nd Regiment, Madras Native Infantry, to the Deputy Adjutant-General to the Forces, Prome, dated Camp Zecoup, the 17th November 1825.

In conformity with the orders received on the 14th instant from the Quartermaster-General's Department, I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of General Campbell, KCB, that I moved with the regiment from our encampment on the nullah at eight o'clock on the night of the 15th, to co-operate with Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant M'Dowall in a simultaneous attack upon that part of the enemy's force reported to be in the vicinity of, or at the village of, Watty-goon. At twelve o'clock P.M. the guide reported that we were not far from the advance guard of the enemy, on which I halted till about four o'clock, when I again advanced, and at about six came up with a body, stated by the guide to be their advance piquet, consisting of about five hundred men, on whom I commenced a skirmishing attack, following them through the jungle on either side of the read.

I found the leading sub division of the light company nearly annihilated and both the officers of that company wounded, that the men of the other companies were failing in numbers, and perceiving no indication that my hopes of a conjoint attack on the other side were correct together with the guide's report that the enemy were five thousand strong, supported by cavalry, I determined to return

The regiment marched off in good order and was almost immediately pursued by a strong body of the enemy

On guining some ground I thought it advisable to reform my line to check their advance Seeing that the fire from the right wing which was first formed, had the desired effect, and that the left was well locked up I resolved on continuing my march apprehensive that should the other columns of attack not have shown themselves the main body with the cavalry, might have been brought to act against me

We then continued our march without interruption the enemy following with great boldness and galling our rear for about three miles during which operation we suffered severely in killed and wounded those unable to move with assistance of the litter, I regret to say we were unavoidably obliged to leave on the ground

The regiment though considerably exhausted from marching all night and the operations of the day marched in good united order till we were within five or six miles of camp when unfor tunately from the want of guides all of whom made off at the commencement of the affair we took 'n wrong road the direction of which we followed for about five miles On retracing our steps we met two sepoys of the 18th Regiment Native Infantry, who thinking to lead us by a short road into Captain Ross camp brought us through a deep swamp and jungle which caused our having many strugglers and prevented our arriving in our present position till four in the evening the regiment having been under aims for twenty hours

I think it my duty to state to you for the General's information meetire satisfaction at the constancy and perseverance with which the regiment sustained itself under the very heavy and destructive fire from the enemy's work until they received my orders to move off and the steady manner in which they retired under the enemy agalling fire

I beg particularly to recommend to the General's notice the conduct of Captun Bird and Leutenant Darby who were both wounded with the light company, and I am much indebted to the whole of the officers for their assistance and support under such tringe circumstances. Licentenant Hay, though severely wounded continued with his company till the enemy had correct to interrupt our march

To Lieutenant and Adjutant Bird I feel particularly indebt ed for the very active and useful aid I derived from him during the whole of these operations

Leutenant DeMontmorency of the Quartermaster General's Department, who conducted my murch displayed much gallantry and zeal in this affair, being almost constantly in advance under the enemy's fire

I have the honour to transmit herewith a return of our loss which I am sorry to say, is very severe. Thirty seven wounded men were brought into camp although all the dooley bearers with the exception of one set ran off during the action

Many of those reported missing fell into the rear from exhaustion during our long and harassing march

The pain I still feel from my wound and the amputation of my finger will I hope plead my eccase for any maccurre; in this report as well as for my not having made it immediately on coming to my ground last evening

Despatch from Lieutenant Colonel Charles Brook 28th Regulett, Native Infantry to Lieutenant Colonel Trdy Deputs Adjutant General &c dated Prome the 17th November 1825

I have the honour to state for the information of the Command or of the Forces that the force under the command of the late Brigadier M Dowall marched from this on the evening of the 15th visix o clock fix and had proceeded about twelve inless when the advanced guard under Captain Coyle 28th Regiment fell in with a party of the enumy to the number of one hundred or one hundred and fifty men apparently advancing. After the exchange of a fix shots during which time two sepoys were wounded the enemy were driven back with loss as we afterwards assertance by seeing on our return three bodies on the spot where the aftair tool 1 lace.

After crossing a nullah the troops were halted for about an hour and a half after which we proceeded forward and heard a shout from a parts of the enemy who had occupied a village about four miles from the spot we had halted at

About dasbreak a bugle was heard a considerable distance to our left and about half past seven it was again I card and ish rth after a heavy firing commenced from the spot where it is 1 ight sound was heard which was then answered by our bugles. We then a tanaced as mightly as possible for about the space of an hour, during which the firing continued on the left principally musketrs but latterly of heavy guns also when we discovered the en my en front to which we were advancing. Six companies of the 28th were ordered as a flanking party to the right when a severe conflict took place, the enemy being in great force and provided with junjals and muskets disputed every inch of ground with great resolution. About this period Captain Coyle was wounded in the arm by a musl et ball and a contusion on the Ireast by a spent jungal tall. After proceeding in this manner about four miles the 43rd Regiment was ordered to take the place of the 28th which was in front of the column and preceeded fighting their way for about a mile when they unexpectedly arrived in front of some strong works from which a will directed and heavy fire was kept up dier company under Ensign Elsey, 43rd was ordered to advance to that part of the works from which the heaviest fire proceeded to endeavour to keep it under on which service it advanced with the most determined resolution, but on arriving near the works the firing became so heavy and galling that it was found neces sary to return At this time I regret to state Brigadier M Dowall was shot in the head by a musket ball and died immediately and nearly at the same moment Lieutenants Manning and Ranken and Engin Elsey 43rd Regiment were obliged to be brought a tay being all severely wounded Lieutenant Ranken I am sorry to say is since dead of his wounds

Unprepared as the lorce was with means for assault I found it necessary after taking the advice of the senior officers to direct the retreat to be sounded the rerr guard commanded by Captain Niggins, assisted by Captain Mileod who in a most gallant and judicious manner covered the retreat which was made in as regular a manner as circui stances and the nature of the country would admit of being a complete jungle and under a severe and heavy fire from great numbers of the enemy who were in the jungle and on our right and left nearly surrounding our column and threatening to cut off our retreat assisted by numerous bodies of cavalty to the number of five or six hindred

After a dreadful harassing march of ten miles which during the latter part was rendered still more distressing by the men dropping on the road from fatigue having rested only an hour and a half since their departure from Frome we at length reached a river or large nullah about nine miles from Frome which having crossed I allowed the troops to rest for about an hour (the enemy had left off pursuing us) when we proceeded and arrived at Frome at about half past seven last evening

I am sorry to say from the want of a greater number of doolies and the absolute exhaustion of the bearers notwithstanding the exertions of the sepoys, and the officers giving their horses to bring in the wounded, &c., I was obliged to leave the dead and some wounded men in the rear.

I feel it the greatest pleasure in making known to the Commander of the Forces that the conduct of both officers and men deserves every praise, especially for their conduct during so harnssing a retreat; their exertions were unremitted.

I am particularly indebted to Captain Wiggins, commanding the 45rd Regiment, and Captain M'Leod for the able manner they covered the retreat; also to Captain White, Assistant Quartermaster-General, and Lieutenant Johnson, Major of Brigade. Captain Cojle was, I am sorry to say, wounded early in the action, whereby I was deprived of the services of that valuable officer during the retreat; and the command of the regiment devolving on Captain Bell, his conduct and exertions deserve my best thanks. Mr. Assistant-Surgeon Sutherland, of the 25th, deserves every praise for his attention to the wounded, in his attention to the men he was unremitting —as also Mr. Assistant-Surgeon Cumming, 43rd, who was equally so

I reckon the enemy, from the very large bodies I saw in different parts of the jungle, to amount to at least ten or twelve thousand infantry, and every way well-armed.

Enclosed is a list of the killed and wounded, &c. of the two regiments under my command.

Report from Lieutenant Colonel D. C Smith, Commanding 38th Regiment, Natice Infantry, to the Adjutant-General of the Forces, dated Comp near Prome, the 17th November 1825

I have the honour to report, for the information of the Commander of the Forces, that, in obedience to orders, I marched from camp at Thomba-la with the 38th Regiment, Madras Native Infantry, at 7 r M on the 18th instant, and arrived hear to the village of Sangie as flour o'clock next morning. Here the guides refused to proceed from not being able to find the road in the dark, and I was obliged to wait until daylight, and only reached Sangie at 6 A. M. on the 16th instant I was induced to make this movement in preference to proceeding by the direct route to Watty-goung in the hope of finding Colonel M'Dowall's detachment, whose bugles were heard near this place, and also on account of my being too late to proceed direct to Watty-goung, which I could not hope to reach before twelve o'clock

On arriving at the village of Saagie, I heard some firing in the direction of Watty-goung, and which appeared about seven miles district. The reports becoming heavier and more frequent I proceeded towards Watty going at seven o'clock, and came up with the firing at twelve o clock Here I observed the enemy in considerable numbers, consisting of cavalry and infantry, with jungals and small guns I directed the light company to advance in front and skirmish with what appeared to be the rear of the enemy, while the regiment emerged from the parrow road in the jungle and formed column of companies when they proceeded to the attack the light infantry ceasing firing and joining the regiment, the enemy were so much taken by surprise that they fled before the regiment could reach them having only lost a few men by the firing of the light infantry

The enemy's cavalry having made some movements which I thought indicated an attacl on the regiment I formed square and remained for some time in this position repeatedly sounding the bugles to attract the attention of Colonel M Downll's detrch ment but without effect as no answering sounds were heard The firms which on our arrival had been very heavy now entirely ceased and not being able to ascertain the nosition of the detach ment I had no option left but to retreat or permit myself to be surrounded by an overwhelming force without hopes of succour or subsistence of any kind I therefore commenced my retreat about one o clock and as I heard no more firing on either part, I trust the diversion made by the 38th Regiment Native Infantry in favour of Colonel M'D wall's detrehment suggested and arranged by the Commander of the Forces, was effected although from the badness of the roads and the distance being much greater than expected not precisely in the manner dictated to The retreat was effected without any opposition by the enemy and the regiment reached the tillage of Sargie at 4 1 M on the 16th instant halted two hours and marched into Pronic at seven o clock A W on the 17th instant

Despatch from Major-General Sir Archibald Oampbell, KOB, ge, to George Suinton, Leq, Secretary to the Government, Secret and Political Department, ge, ge, ge, dated Prome, the 30th November 1823.

The enemy, in closing in upon our front, has been unremitting in his endeavours to intercept our communication with Rangoon. Large bodies of troops for this service have lately passed our flanks on both sides of the Irrawaddy, and the state of that river, covered, as it has lately been, with large and valuable convoys of stores and treasure, has necessarily caused me much anxiety and retarded my moving forwards.

Shudoun-Mew and the Tharrawaddy districts have been overrun by these tinerant bands, and I have been under the necessity of detaching Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin with a strong detachment for the purpose of driving the enemy from Shudoun, and, if possible, of surprising any parties he might have in that neighbourhood. On the night of the 24th the Lieutenant-Colonel marched to Shudoun, but the enemy, receiving intelligence of his approach, fled to the interior, and the detachment returned to quarters, after clearing the left bank of the river for fifteen miles below frome

On the western bank I deemed it of importance to retain possession of Padoun-Mow, and for that purpose stationed one hundred men of His Majesty's Royal Regiment and one hundred of the 26th Madras Native Indutry at that place, tunder the command of Captain Deane of the Boyals, and supported on the river by a division of the flottlla under Lieutenant Kellett of the Nasy. This party was represtedly attacked by the enemy in great force, and the meritorious conduct of both officers and men, as detailed in the enclosed copies of letters from Captain Deane, will, I am certain, obtain for them the approbation of the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council.

The first division of His Majesty's 87th Regiment, in coming up the river, was fixed at from the bank by a party of the enemy, and two men were unfortunately killed, with on-officer wounded. The solders immediately landed and draw the enemy from his post with some loss. The particulars are detailed in a report from the commanding officer, Major Gally, of which a copy is herewith enclosed.

Two divisions of His Majesty's 87th Regiment with the treasure bests, have now arrived, and I purpose merching out to attack the enemy to morrow, the consequence of which will, I trust, be felt by all the dependent corps which have so long annoyed us

Report from Captain C Deane, 1st Foot, Commanding a detachment, to the Adjutant General of the Forces serving in Ava, dated Puddoun, the 20th November 1825

I have the honour to report, for the information of the Commander of the Forces a brush which took place between the party under my command and the enemy this morning

In the early part of the morning the fog was so thick as to preclude our seeing anything in our front, and on its clearing up I discovered by meins of a reconnoiting party, that the enemy were in considerable force on the edge of the jungle in front of my left and shortly after I discovered them marching in three columns across my front for the attack of my right, left and centre their main object being evidently to gain the right of the village. I consequently detriched a party to turn their left and had in a few minutes the satisfaction to observe that column retiring in confusion after a very few rounds. During this time their right was engaged with a strong picquet which I had placed to dispute the passage of a bridge on the left of the village, this they effectually did. In both the defence of my centre and left. I was much indebted to the prompt assistance afforded me by Lieutenant Kellett. R.N.

The enemys force consisted of two gilt chattahs and about eight hundred men armed with muskets and spears, with two or three pinjals. Their loss I conceive to have been about twent; five or thirty men killed. We had not, I am happy to say a single man wounded. The enemy, however, from the great extent of the village succeeded in setting it on fire at both ends but very little damage was done as we extinguished it almost immediately. The Rajah and all his attendants deserted place the moment the firing commenced, he has however, just returned and appears much more composed and highly delighted with the result.

Report from Captain C Deane, 1st Foot, Commanding a detachment, to the Adjutant General of the Evrees, dated Puddoun, the 25th Nocember 1825,

I have the honour to report for the information of the Commander of the Forces another affair which we have had with the Burmese this morning

ouns with which they annoyed us very considerably, having taken up a position in the woody part of the village, from whence they opened a musket fire on the boats From this I determined to dislodge them, and sent out a strong party for that purpose, these came close upon them, and drove them out with, I have every reason to believe, considerable loss They are, however, by no means discomfited, and are, I understand determined to entrunch themselves round us and make regular approaches, as their orders are peremptory to carry the place. In confirmation of this a number of their entrenching tools were left behind by the killed and wounded Our only casualty this morning, I am happy to say, is one lascar severely, but not dangerously wounded The shot first grazed the pawbone entered the shoulder, and came out under the arm pit From one of the prisoners taken this mornand whom I have by this opportunity forwarded to Major Jackson I learn there are absolutely five thousand and five hundred men now here and that a further force is hourly expected down from Puttoun doun where, he says, the Seta woon now is

Report from Major W S Gully, Commanding the 87th Foot, to Lieutenant Colonel F H S Tidy, CB , Deputy Adjutant General, dated - November 1825

I have the honour to state for the information of Major Gene ral Sir Archibald Compbell, Commanding the Forces that on the morning of the 25th instant while in progress to this station with three companies of His Majesty's 87th Regiment under my com mand I was suddenly attacked from a steep bank covered with tungle by the Burmese near the village of Theacombine when after a smart skirmish they retreated in great confusion. Their loss I could not ascertain as they carried off their killed and babanaw

I have every reason to be satisfied with the conduct of both officers and men particularly with that of Captain Bowes who commanded a small party in advance and sustained with great coolness the first and heaviest part of the enemy s fire after hav ing been wounded by almost the first shot

I beg leave to bring to the notice of Sir Archibald Campbell the good conduct of Mr Volunteer Hutchins on this occasion and in fact ever since he has been with the regiment

From Mayor General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.O.B., &c., to George Swintin Erg. Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c., &c., &c., dated Head Quarters Camp on the heights of Napadec, the 4th December 1823

My last letters would apprise the Right Honble the Gov ernor General in Council that the main Burmese army amounting to between fifty and sixty thousand men had taken post in the immediate vicinity of Prome and I have been for the last ten days anxiously awaiting an attack upon the strong position we had with much labour cleared and prepared for giving full effect to the movement and operations of our columns and every possible encouragement has been held out to induce the enemy to meet us once on open ground Finding him however much too wary to be drawn from his strongholds in the jungle and suffering much annoyance and inconvenience from his marauding parties and want of forage I, on the 30th ultimo took measures for making a general attack upon every accessible part of his line extending on the east bank of the Irrawaddy, from a commanding ridge of hills upon the river to the villages of Simbike and Sambeh upon the left distant from Prome eleven miles in a north east direction The enemys army was divided into three corps The left corps commanded by Maha Nemiow, an old and experienced General who had been sent down from Ava to introduce a new system of conducting the war was stockaded in the jungles at Simbike and Hyalay upon the Navine river and this corps amounted to fifteen thousand men -Burmese Shans and Cassayers -of which soven The centre, under the immediate orders hundred were cavalry of the Kee Woonghee was strongly entrenched upon the hills of Napadee maccessible except on one side by a narrow pathway commanded by seven pieces of artillery and on the river side the pavigation was commanded by several batteries of heavy ordnance. this corps consisted of thirty thousand men and the space between the left and centre corps a thick and extensive forest was merely occupied by a line of posts The enemy's right under the orders of the Suddawoon occupied the west bank of the Irrawadds strongly stockaded and defended by artillery

2 Leaving four regiments of Native infantry in the works at Prome on the morning of the 1st instant I marched upon Simbiles with the rest of the force to dislodge the corps of Maha Nemiow from its position on the Nawine river and as previously concerted. His Excellency Commodore Sir James Drisbane with the fidulial and it the 20th Madras Native Infantry acting in cooperation on the bank of the river shortly after dashight commenced a heavy canonaide on the coming a centre and continued meally two hours to attract his shief attention to that point

- 3. On reaching the Nawine river at the village of Ze-ouke, the force was divided into two columns, the right column under the command of Brigadier-General Cotton continuing to advance along the left bank of the river, while, with the other column, I crossed at the ford of Ze-ouke and advanced upon Simbike and Sambeh, in a direction nearly parallel with the Brigadier-General's division.
 - 4. We had to contend with every disadvantage of a difficult and enclosed country, nor did our information upon the position occupied by the enemy enable me to make any previously-fixed arrangement for intercepting the retreat of an enemy to whom every footpath in the jungle was familiar, and whose irregular flight would, I was aware, be made by every path that promised safety at the moment. My object, however, was that whichever column should have the good fortune to fall in with the enemy first should attack him vigorously in front, while the other should endeavour to occupy such positions as would enable it to cut in upon him when driven from his defences. The route followed by Brigadier-General Cotton brought him in front of the stockaded position at Simbike, which he at once assaulted, and when his fire first opened, the column under my own direction was about a mile and-a-half distant to his left and rear. I, in consequence, detached Brigadier Elrington to guard the ford at Ze-ouke and the main road leading to Neoun-benzeik and the position of the Kee-Woonghee, while, with the rest of the column, I pushed on towards Sangee. in the hope of falling in with the enemy retiring upon Watty-goon. Brigadier-General Cotton and his gallant division did not allow me time for completing this movement; in less than ten minutes every stockade was carried, the enemy completely routed, and I had only an opportunity of cannonading his panic-struck masses as they rushed past through the openings of the jungle in my front.
 - 5. The attack upon Simbike was most handsomely led by Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin of His Majesty's 41st Regiment, with the advance guard of the right column, consisting of the light companies of His Majesty's 1st Royals, 41st and 39th Regiments, and the light companies of the 18th and 28th Regiments of Madras Native Infantry; and His Majesty's 41st Regiment, under Major Chambers, stormed at another point with the usual intropidity of that gallant corps. The enemy left three hundred dead upon the ground, with the whole of his commissariat and other atores, guns, from four to five hundred muskets, and upwards of one hundred Cassay horses. The body of the old commander, Maha Nemiow, seventy-five years of age, was also found among the dead.

and storm the heights in front, and the six companies of His Mayesty's 87th Regiment advanced through the judgle to the right and drove everything before them on that side. Nothing could surpass the steadiness and resolute courage displayed in this attack, sericely a shot was fired in return to the enemy's continued rolleys. His Mayesty s 28th Regiment, which led, first entered the enemy's entrenchments on the heights, driving him from hill to hill over precipiets which could only be ascended by a narrow stair, until the whole of the formidable position, nearly three miles in extent, was in our possession.

- 9 During the attack His Excellency Commodore Sir James Brisbane afforded me the most able co-operation, and I do myself the honour to enclose His Excellency's report of the good conduct of the officers and men of the Hon ble Compuny's service serving on board the flotilla, and I much regret to observe the name of Captain Division of His Myesty's ship Anachne, who was conspicuously forward in the attack, amongst the list of killed
 - 10 Lieutenants Underwood Commanding Engineer, and Abbott of the Bengal Engineers who had closely reconnoired the enemy's position, both volunteered to lead the columns, and were, I am sorry to say, both wounded on that service
 - 11 I have also to regret the loss of many promising young officers and brave soldiers but I am happy to observe that our loss, considering the extent and strength of the enemy's position and great numerical superiority has not been great, and I own it to the troops to say that the impression of their own steadness and intrepidity upon the mind of the enemy could alove have secured to them the brilliant successes of the 1st and 2nd with so few casualities as will be found in the returns I have the honour herewith to transmit
 - 12. The defeat of the enemy's army on the east bank of the Irrawaldy has been most complete, he has been driven from all his strong positions in this neighbourhood with the loss of all his artiller; great quantities of ammunition and warlike stores, and although it is impossible from the nature of the ground to calculate the extent of his loss in killed and wounded I am satisfied he has suffered most severely, and I am mistaken if the Burmese commander again assembles within many thousands of the force lately in our front.
 - 13 The right corps of the enemy's army, under Sudda Woon appears still to occupy some high ground on the west bank of the

- Irrawaddy. Measures are now in progress for attacking that division, and I have no doubt it will be disladged from its defences' to-morrow morning.
- 14. On the 6th I propose marching upon Meeaday by the Neoun-benreik road, with the first division of the army. Brigadier-General Cotton, with the 2nd Division, will remain a few days longer to act in co-operation with the flotilla, in the event of the enemy's having railied in his defences on the river between Prome and Neoun-benzeik. I have no certain information upon his next raillying point; Meeaday on the east and Maloun on the west bank of the river are both fortified and are furnished with artillery. They are both named as the probable points of remion, and I will lose no time in appearing before whichever they have chosen for that purpose, but I think it important that one division should containe to act in co-operation with the flotilla, until it is clearly ascertained that the navigation of the river is open between this and Meeaday.
- 15. I have to solicit the attention of the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council to the judicious and cordial co-operation afforded me by His Excellency Commodors Sir James Brisbane and the boats of His Majesty's squadron employed on this service. My best thanks are due to Brigadier General Cotton for the able manner in which he led his column, and for his judicious and decisive attack upon the enemy's left at Surbille.

The services of Brigadier Elrington, Lieutenant-Colonels Goduin and Sale, Myjors Frith, Chambers, Thornhill and Gully, who led columns, also claim my notice; Lieutenant-Colonel Hopkinson, commanding the artillery, Lieutenant-Colonel Pollock and Captain Graham, of the Bengal Artillery, merit my fullest approbation for their exerctions, and Captain Lumsden of the Bengal Horse Artillery, although badly wounded, refused to quit the battery and continued from his chair to direct the fire of his guns

- Brigadier-General Cotton informs me that he received every aid from the experience of Brigadiers Armstrong and Brodie, serving under his command.
- 17. From my Deputy Adjutant-General and Deputy Quartermeter General, Loutenant-Colonel Tidy and Major Jackson, and from my Military Secretary, Captan Snodgrass, I received every aid and assistance during these operations; and Captain Smith of the Bengal Army volunteered his services and accompanied me as Aide de-Camp on the occasion

tinguished conduct of the officers and men belonging to that branch of it, which is in the service of the Hon'ble Company. It is extremel, gratifying to observe that on this as on other recent occasions they have uniformly vied with the light dirt sion (composed of the boats of the squadron) in zeal gallantry, and exertion. Indeed since my arrival at head quarters, I have derived no small satisfaction at the promptitude good order, and regularity which have been conspicuous in the details of the flottlind. One common feeling animates the whole of this force, which has produced the happinest results.

I regret to announce to you amidst the decided advantage of the acquisition of an important post the death of Captain Dawson of the Anachae. In him the service has lost a gallant and highly mentorious officer whose recent promotion to the rank of Commander is a proof of the opinion I entertained of his professional character.

Letter from Commodore Sir James Brisbane, Bart, CB, to John
"Wilson Croker, Eeq, dated on board the Hon ble Companys steam ressel "Diana," above Prome, on the Irrawaddy, the 3rd December 1823.

The enemy having approached Prome in large bodies of men, evidently with the intention of drawing a line of circumvaliation round the British position I beg you will be pleased to inform the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty that the Commander of the Forces moved out on the 1st instant for the purpose of attacking the left column a short distance in the interior, and requested that I would at the same time male a diversion in his favour by engaging the enemy a centre position at Pagoda Point, with the flotilla under my immediate command. It is extremely strong both by nature and art and is situated on the left bank of the river a few miles in advance of Prome I am hanns to say that the result of these arrangements was decidedly favourable, the enemy's left column consisting of about fourteen thousand men being completely overthrown their ordnance and the whole of their commissariat captured and a heavy loss of men The next day (restorday) the Major General determined on following up the blow by an attack upon Pagoda P int the object of the former discresion the flotilla covering the advance of the arms along the shore. After a cannonading of several hours the troops rushed forward to the assault, overcame the natural obstacks which presented themselves and carried the position in the most gallant style. The flotilla at the same time pushed on up the river and captured the whole of the entires beats (amounting to about three hundred), together with several guns, four hundred muskets, and a large quantity of stores.

I have much satisfaction in stating that the whole of the officers and men employed in the flotilla conducted themselves throughout this service in a manner that reflects the highest credit on each individual, composed as this force is of various establishments. The officers of the Hon'ble Company's Marine ried with those of the Royal Navy in gallantry and exertion. Captain Chads of the Alligator, who commanded the light division, displayed the same zeal, judgment, and intrepidity which have · characterised his conduct since the operations in this quarter began. I have, however, the painful duty of announcing the death of Captain John F. Dawson of the Arachne, whose high professional character had induced me so recently to promote him to the mak of Commander. The gallantry of this much lamented officer was conspicuous on all occasions, inviting, by his example. the exertions of all under his direction; he fell just as success had crowned our efforts.

I cannot close this letter without expressing my admiration of the steadiness, good order, and discipline of the troops, in advancing along a line of march intersected with thick jungle and a succession of intrenchments, until the storming took place. The two arms of His Majesty's service are in full and hearty coperation for the objects of the present expedition; and every success may be hoped for from the perseverance and resolution of Sir Archibald Campbell, the distinguished Commander of the Forces.

series of stockades on the right bank of the river

This operation was performed in conjunction with the navy and flotilla and I am hanns to add was attended with the most complete success The enemy retired from their stockades on the river from the severe fire from four ha vitzers and some rockets ably directed by Lieutenants Paton and Seton of the Bengal Artillery but on taking possession of them it was discovered they had a stockaded work about half a mile in the intenor completely manned and occurred by guns Brigadier Armstroig Colon ! Brodie and Colonel Godwin immediately move I up on its centre and right and I took the Royals to the left and the nork was carried instantly the enemy leaving three hundred dead on the field and dispersing in every direction. I have sent in several prisoners, and from three hundred to three I undred and fifty muskets were broken by my men having been abandoned by the enemy I have set fre to the whole of their d fences and lare only to ad ! my warmest acknowledgments to Brigadier Arristropy , ho com manded the adiance to Colonel Bro he, who hald arge of the light companies and Colonel God vin who commanded the reserve and to every officer and man who vas engaged.

Letter from Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell KCB &c. to George Sunton Eig Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c &c &p. Fort William, dated IId Ors, Meesday the 19th December 1825

The enemy defeated and driven from his positions at Simbike Napadee and on the west bank of the Irrawaddy as detailed in my despatches of the 4th and 5th I on the 6th instant marched back with the 1st Division of the army to the ulliggs of Ze ouke and Natalaen upon the Nawne river from whence the roads to Waity goon and Neounbenzek branch off and where I had order ed the commissant of the army to assemble

- Aware that the enemy had been long employed in fortify ing the banks of the river from Meeaday to Paloh it became an important consideration to endeavour to turn these positions natu rilly strong and extremely difficult of access For this purpose I determined to march upon Mceaday with one division by the route of Watty goon Seeyan goon Scindoop and Tonkinding turning the posit ons as high as Bollay while the division under the orders of Brigadier General Cotton should march by the roal of Neounbenzerk nearly parallel with the river and in communi cation with the flotilla on board of which I had placed a force consisting of His Majesty's Royal Regiment and details com manded by Brigadier Armstrong to act in close and constant operation with the naval forces under His Excellency Commodore Sir James Brisbane From Tonkindine it was my further inten tion to have turned Meeaday by its left and to have posted one division of my army in its rear previous to attacking it in front
 - 3 Pursuant to this plan of operations I marched upon Watty goon with the 1st Division on the 9th instant directing Brigadier General Cotton to come ence his march upon the 12th 1y which arrangement the approach of the two columns upon Paloh would nearly correspond and His Excellency Commodore and I Imment to say that numerous fatal instructs of cholera have occurred in both divisions of the arms. Dian unavoidably ensued and I did not reach Tonkindine till the 10th instant. On partoling to Bollay on the river I found the enemy had abandoned his position at Paloh and the expectations I had firmed from the that movement of the 1st Drisson were fully confirmed. At Bollay we opened a communication with the flotills and Brigadier General Cottons alvision the riport of whose march I have the honour to enclose which with the other letters herewith transmitted will I trust afford the Right Honble the Governor General unit to Council a satisfactory proof of the consequences resulting from the operations of the 1st, 2nd and 5th and the subsequent movements of the force.

- 5 Finding that the enemy had retreated from Mecaday with the greater part of his army I on the 17th instant moved forward to flabboo with the advance. From flabboo I directed the Pigit Hon ble the Governor General's Body Guard under Captain Dyke to push on towards Mecaday by two roads and feel the enemy's advanced posts.
- 6 The enemy had evacuated the place but at five miles beyond it Captain D₃ le came up with the rear and took some prisoners with a war boat containing it ree guns the cavalry having come suddenly upon six while close under the bank of the river
- 7 The country over which the army has marched bears ample testimony to tle panic and d smay in which tle enemy l'as retired while the numerous dead and dying lying about the country afford a melancholy proof of the misery and privations which his troops are siftering. His loss in killed and wounded all the prisoners affirm to have been very great and desertions to a great extent are duly taking place.
- B Patangoh and Melloon are the points that have been chosen for reassembling the army in front of which I hope to be with some part of the force in the course of a few days although some delay will unavoidably occur before the state of the commissariat will permit the whole force again to move forward
- P S-I have just received information that Melloon has been cracuated
- From His Excellency Coms odore S r James Brisba e Bart, CB to Br gadier General S r Arch bald Campbell LCP \(\frac{1}{2}\)c date! Hon ble Company sican ressel Diana off Mecaday on the Irrawaddy its 18th December 1823

Adverting to that part of your Excellency's letter of the 15th of No ember last in which you do me the honour of express ing your readiness to receive my opinion upon any points connected with the future operations of the combined force which the proximity of our movements may enable me to afford you I avail myself of that proof of confidence on your part to lay before you such observations as have occurred to me in the advance of the flottlist to this place.

2 Having embarked His Majesty's Royal Regiment on the afternoon of the 11th instant under the command of Brigadier Armstrong I proceeded from the Musgius a pagoda point early the next morning with the flotilla under my orders advance guard made its appearance, and that a war boat with three guns and been captured which in the hurry of their retreat they could not take with them

From Brijadier General W Colton to Brigadier General Sir Archibald Campbell, K CB, &c, Commanding the Forces in Aca dated Camp at Ing youn, the 19th December 1825

I have the honour to acquaint you that in consequence of the heavy fall of tain during the night of the 11th and following day I did not move the division under my command from the encampment at Ze outse till the formoon of the 13th instant.

2 The column arrared at Merong on the Irrawaddy on the 14th at which place I halted during the 15th and marched outhe 16th to Bollay but was obliged to encump three miles to the southward at Seimbow in consequence of encountering an impassable milliak. Halted on the 17th at the above encampment while the pioneers and strong working parties were employed under the direction of the engineer officers in constructing a bridge and the commissariat officer was engaged in bringing up the provisions.

3 The bridge was completed yesterday morning the 18th and I moved the column to its present encampment.

4 During the march of the 16th instant between Peum bit lan and Pafoli the column passed through the enemy s strongly stockaded postton extending two miles and one furloug. The works towards the river were particularly well a lapted for defence and the whole commanded by stockades on the hills to the rear with abuties, and entrenchments.

5 I have much satisfaction in stating that the commissains with the division under my command have suffered in a very trifling degree from the breakage of carts &c. and that the entire department will arrive in camp during the forenoon

From Brigalier R Armstrong to Lieutenant Colonel F S. H Tidy Deputy Adjutant General dated Mesaday il s 19th December 1820

For the information of the Commander of the Forces I have the honour to inform you that the whole of the troops compost g the water column being embarked on the 11th instant Commo dore Sir James Brisbane moved with the flottlik up the river on the morning of the 12th. In proceeding up a number of del neces were observed on both sides generally breastworks, with lere and there embrasires for guns and the situation invariably chosen with great judgment for the annoyunce of boils ascending the river. Yen down however was not strengthened from the time of my being recalled from that post

- 2 On the 13th instant the flotilla having arrived within two miles of Paloh (or Succa down as more generally named by the Burmese) and being well aware that the enemy were long employed in erecting defences there it was considered necessary by Sir James Brisbane, as well as myself to reconnecte it accordingly proceeded with the boats of the light division and soon found that these works like all we had previously met were entirely abandoned and proves in the most convincing manner how completely broken disarranged and panic struck the enemy s army must be from the success of our operations on the 1st 2nd and 5th instant, for it is not easy to conceive a chain of stronger works than here presented themselves extend ng at least one mile in length on the eastern bank of the river erected on bold undulating ground every advantage of which was admirably applied, so that the possession of the lower defences had they been attacked in succession would have exposed the troops to an enfilled ing fire and would thus have been untenable The defences con sisted of abattised breastworks on the river with reverses run ning up the heights and two strong stockades the most northern or upper of which was constituted of very strong planks, about nine feet high the whole of the faces thickly abaltised and each of them at least one hundred and eighty sards in length. Time would not allow me to examine the continuation of these works which I am nware were carried into the interior and rested on the road to Prome. but those running near the river were in themselves so extensive and well built that great multitudes of men must have been long and indefatigably employed in their construction, and had the enemy attempted their defence they could not have been carried without very severe loss on our part. In fact in our possession. I night say they would be impregnable
 - ? On the western bank immediately opposite a great number of defences were also erected which ran entirely up the commanding hill, where they likewise had τ well constructed stocka le
 - 1 As both sides of the river (which in this part is narrow) were thus strongly defended it would have been impossible for the flotilla to proceed up until either side had been reduced had not the enemy by his flight thus rendered nugatory one of the b st positions and chain of field defences I have ever seen
 - 5 From means that time would allow by fire and otherwise were us d to destroy these works.
 - 6 The flotilia arrived at Mecadas earls on the morning of

Despatch fio : Major General St. Archibald Campbell KCD &c to George Sounton Lag , Secretary to Government Secret and Political Department &c &c, &c, dated Head Quarters, Patanagoh the 31st December 1825

Adverting to my last despatch I have now to state that the information I received regarding the evacuation of Melloon by the enemy was erroneous Certain information of his having rallied at that point reached me shortly after I began my march from Meeaday with the leading division of the army and it was at the same time stated that a chief of rank had been sent up to Ava after the defeats at Prome for the purpose of represent ing to His Muesty the hopcless state of his affairs and the im possibility of our progress upon the capital being arrested by any military arrangement

On the 26th ultimo these reports were confirmed by the arrival of a messenger to the steam vessel under a fing of truce communicating that Kolein Menghie had arrived at Melloon deputed by His Majesty the King of Ava, and with full powers to conclude a treaty of peace with us In answer to this message I in concurrence with the Civil Commissioner sent Lieutenant Colonel Tidy and Lieutenant Smith RN to the Burmese camp to ascertain what arrangements the King of Avas commis sioners proposed making with us A truce of twenty five days was requested and positively refused as previously determined on the above officers being directed to say as was afterwards com municated in writing that nothing beyond twenty four hours would be given for the first meeting with the Burmese com missioners and that the truce was at an end as soon as the

OPERATIONS IN PEGU.

WHILE Sir Archibald Campbell was driving the Burmese armies before him from Prome to Melloon, the province of Pegu was the theatic of events, the narrative of which may best be introduced in this place.

When making his arrangements to move forward from Prome, Sir Archibald, it will be remembered, referred to the formation of a brigade at Pegu, under the command of Colonel Pepper, for the purpose of clearing that province of the enemy. The brigade was formed in October 1825, and comprised the flank companies of the 1st Madras European Regiment and the 3rd, 12th and 34th Madras Native Infantry. On the 22nd December this force marched from Pegu, and on the 3rd January 1826, it occupied Sho-e-geen, an important post, which the enemy abandoned only just as Colonel Pepper's attack was about to begin.

At this place intelligence was received that the former Govenor of Martaban, with a considerable force, lad stockaded himself at Sittang, in Colonel Pepper's rear, and cut off the communication of the column with Pegu. Lieutenant-Colonel Comy was accordingly despatched with his regiment, the 3rd (Palameottah) Madras Native Light Infantry, to dislodge the enemy. The attack was delivered on the morning of the 7th January, and was completely repulsed, Colonel Conry being killed, with many of his men.

Colonel Pepper lost no time in retrieving this disaster. He immediately moved on Sittang with the whole of his force, and on the 11th January carried the stockade by storm, inflicting heavy loss on the defenders.

Soon after the fall of Sittang, Colonel Pepper was reinforced by four companies of the 45th Foot and seven of the 1st Madras Native Infantry from Rangoon The enemy, however, still for a time kept the field, and in I ebruary made a vigorous attack on a post which Colonel Pepper had established at Makow, to maintain his communications with Pegu. The attack was repulsed by Linsign Clerk, who commanded the post, and soon after the conclusion of peace at Yandaboh brought the operations in Pegu to a conclusion

The subjoined reports give the particulars of these operations —

Letter from Brigadier W Smelt, Commanding in the Lower Provinces, to George Swinton Log, Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c &c, &c, dated Rangoon, the 13th January 1886

I have the honour to forward to you's copy of two letters, dated the 4th and 6th January 1826 from Lieutenant Colonel Pepper commanding a detachment in the Pegu district, detailing a greatifying account of his operations in that quarter

Private accounts have reached me which I have no reason to doubt that an attack on the strong post of Setoning which was supposed to have been created with a party detached by Colonel Pepper of the 3rd Regiment Light Infantry under Lieutenant Colonel Conry did not succeed, with the loss of two officers and stemen killed and two officers and stemen whiled and intelligent to say that Lieutenant Colonel Conry a most able and intilligent officer was killed, also Lieutenaut Adums, Lieutenaut Harvey, wounded severely Lieutenaut Power slightly I am in expect atten that Colonel Pepper with a reinforcement and guns will lave taken Setoning Lieuten to reinforcement and guns will cave taken Setoning Lieuten for he receives for Archibald Camp bell's recall to Pega in consequence of the treaty of peace having been arred to off three hundred of the enemy to relieve the inhabitants; otherwise, I should have found it most difficult, if not impossible, to have succeeded.

It is my intention to move forward with as little delay as possible, but as a further supply of provisions will be uccessary, I am forced to remain for the present, and should the indent from the commissariat officer here be received with this, may I request you will be good enough to push them forward by the Setoung river, a branch of which falls into that of Pegu

Setoung is now the only post of the enemy between this and Martaban. I have, therefore, resolved to detach Colonel Comr and the 3rd Light Infantry, for its reduction, by water. That once accomplished, does away with every impediment to a free communication between Rangoon and Tonghoo, though it seems absolutely necessary that a detachment be fixed there.

The various calls I have for the services of my men has forced on me the necessity of directing the party I left at Pegu to join me and to escort the provisions ammunition, &c., in store there to this place, but as there is little doubt of the fall of Setoing, Pegu requiring but a very small detail, a native officer's party I considered as sufficient, and therefore directed Captain Kitson to leave one, as well as the sick and convalescent men, and a native discoser to attend them

I trust with reference to my letter of the 4th, that it will be in your power to relieve the whole of the men now absent from my command, for I am well assured, after providing a garrison at this place, when I move forward, I shall still be very mefficient for the execution of the further objects to which the Commander of the Forces calls my attention in his instructions for my rule and guidance

There are several strong posts between this and Tonghoo, each of which I am told will require to be reduced, and as I must keep open a communication sepoys in small details will for this purpose, be required, and my effective strength will instirutly be decreased as I advance. Thus situated I hope it will be in your power to take charge of Setoing, or the objects obtained will, I fear, be in some danger of being defeated.

Despatch from Brigadier-General Sir Archibal I Campbell, K.C.B., &c., to George Skinton, Ing., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department, &c., &c., &c., dated Head Quarters, Camp Yandabo, 45 miles south west of Aco, the 2nd March 1826

Herewith I have the honour to transmit to you Licutemant Colonel Pepper's report to me of the operations against the enemy of the detachment under his command.

All the Lieutenant Colonels measures appear to have been taken with much promptitude and carried into effect with that spirit and judgment I had reason to expect from his well known zeal and professional abilities. With him I much lament the loss the service has sustained in the fall of Lieutenant Colonel Coury and the other brave officers mentioned in his report castern bank of the river of that name, and midway between Sho-e geen and Martaban, for the purpose of opening the communication between my detachment and the Lower Provinces, I have now the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the Commander of the Forces, that Lieutenant-Colonel Conry's party left this on the 6th instant by water. On its arrival at Meekow, where an officer s party had been posted to protect our supplies and the inhabitants of that place, who had contributed so greatly to our assistance, the Lieutenant Colonel received a report from Lieutenant Bell, commanding there, that he had, on the 4th, been twice attacked by four or five hundred men belonging to Oudmah, the Ex Rajah of Martaban, sent from Setoung, whom he succeeded in repulsing. This induced Lieutenant Colonel Conry to lose not a moment in proceeding

On the morning of the 7th instant, he reached the place about noon, and instantly made his arrangements for the attack, which commenced at the o'clock.

It is with feelings of deep regret I am obliged to report its complete failure, with the loss of Lieutenant-Colonel Conry and Lieutenant Adams 3rd Regument Palamoettah Light Infantry, killed, Lieutenant and Adjutant Harvey, severely, and Lieutenant Power, slightly, wounded, one native officer and nine practes killed, one bugler and eighteen rank and file wounded The party returned to Meekow on the same night.

On the afternoon of the 8th, I received this report, and in

Having employed some time in reconneiting the place to take up my position I found the creek which flanks the north face of the stoclade running in a parallel line about one hundred and fifty yards from it not fordable but ascertained from my guides that it would become so at low water

The stoclade stands on a considerable eminence with an abrupt ascent to it commanding every point by which the assail ants must approach. It appeared of great extent built entirely of teak timber finished at intervals with loop holes through every part of it and its height from twelve to fourteen feet.

Pending the time when I might be able to cross the ford the artillery were i luced in position and opened a fire of shot and shell on every point

I then prepared the columns of attack as per margin

The fire from the enemy was most heavy and destructive and the obstacles to be surmounted by our troops were of no common kind every man having been up to his neck in water while crossing the creel

It is with the deepest regret that I have to report that our success though complete has been attended with heavy loss Among the killel are Captain Cursham 1st Furopean Regiment and Captain Stedman 34th Regiment Chicacole Light Infurty both commanding columns and of the vounded Nayr Home 12th Regiment Native Infurty severely (also comman ling a column) Licutenant Fullarton 17th R giment Commissairut Department dangerously Licutenant Power and Legizient Palameotiah Light Infantry again severely together with a severe loss in the lower grades an per rutum attached

The limits of this despatch prevent me from particularizing the zeal and devotion to their duty of so many who fully met the expectations I had formed of them; yet I cannot refrain from bringing to the particular notice of the Major-General Commanding the Forces, the names of Captains Cursham and . Stedman, who so gallantly fell at the head of their respective columns; of Major Home, 12th Regiment, and Captain Corbet, who succeeded him when wounded; of Lieutenants Charlton, 1st European Regiment, and Haig, 34th Regiment Chicacole Light Infantry, who, both likewise, succeeded to the command of their columns, on the death of the before-named officers; of Captain Dickenson, commanding the artillery, whose heavy fire and excellent practice contributed so mainly to keep down that of the enemy, of Lieutenant Fullarton, of the Commissariat Department, who handsomely volunteered his services, of Lieutenant Woodgate, of the Quartermaster-General's Department, for his exertions in leading on the Pioneers, with the ladders, in both attacks, and of Lieutenant Williams, commanding the 3rd Regiment Palamcottah Light Infantry, not only for his anxiety and zeal, but for the able assistance I have derived from his perfect Inox ledge of the Burmesa language

Previous to quitting the place, which I did yesterday morning, I had the whole of the defences of every description destroyed and burnt so completely that not a vestige remains

I cannot conclude without expressing to the Major General the sense I entertain of the able and ready services I have received from my staff, not only on this but on every occasion, and I beg leave to bring their names to the favourable notice of the Major General, 1:z Captain Budd, 43rd Regiment Brigado Major, and Captain Spicer, 12th Regiment Deputy Assistant Quarter master General, who in this affair each conducted a column to the attack.

Letter from I seutenant Colonel II II Pepper Osmmanding a Kield Detachment to the Deputy Adjutant General of the Forces under the co smand of Major General Sir Archibald Campbell KCI, dated Sho e geen the 19th February 1826

I have the honour to forward the accompanying copy of a letter from Ensign Clerl 3rd Regiment Palamottah Light Infant ry detailing an account of an affur that took place on the 16th instant at Mechow with a considerable party of Burmese detached by the Governor of Martaban for the purpose of carrying the villages of Bow and Meckow

On receipt of the intelligence on the 17th instant I do my solf the honour to report for the information of Major General Sir Archibald Campbell a Ca B that I sent Capian Leggett command ing the 3rd Regiment with one hundred rank and file to reinforce the detachment at Meekow, which added to one hundred men from Pogu will leave him sufficient numbers to defend that part of the country to keep open the communication and protect our supplies

It is with much pleasure I have to bring to the notice of the Major General the conduct of Ensign Clerk 3rd Regiment com manding the detachment and of Leutenant Johnstone of the Commissional Department who had volunteered his services, laving proceeded there for provisions and carriage for my detach ment.

Letter from Ens gn F J Clerk 3rd Regiment Com nandis g a Detach ment dated Ca p Meekow the 18th February 1826

I have the honour to report to you for the information of Brigadier Pepper that I received intelligence on the evening of the 15th instant that a body of men had been detached by the ex Governor of Martahan to attack the villages of Bew and Meekow Conceiving my presence necessary with the prequet of thirty men statuoned at the former place in order that I mg ft take advantage of circumstances and wishing to stan I mj ground if possible or if pressed too hard to fall back on my position at Meekow I lost no time in proceeding there

Fort mately Licentenant Johnstone 3rd Regiment Palameottah Light Infantry attached to the Commissariat Department was present at Meekow, and offered his services. He consented to take the command of my main party, and to reinforce me if necessary.

A little before day-light on the 16th, a party of the enemy suddenly rushed on my picquet, and made a general attack on the village. Their numbers left me no alternative but forcing my way through them and effecting a junction with my other party. Agreeable to promise, I found Lieutenant Johnstone had come to my assistance. The reinforcement, though small, was most opportune, and a retreat to my old position was then conducted in the most orderly manner, the whole acting as light infantry, in extended order, in consequence of the enemy having shewn a disposition to surround my little party. Their fire from jinjals and small arms was quick and noisy, but ill-directed, as will appear from the little loss I have sustained.

Having gained my old position, I had the advantage of a few additional men from a guard obliged to be left for the protection of some supplies Here I determined to make a stand, and, extending my party in such a manner, that the left rested on the right bank of the river Setoung, and my right on a rahoon's house, we continued opposed to each other until half-past eight o'clock, when, seeing their line beginning to waver, I seized the opportunity of charging, and am happy to say the result surpassed my most sanguine expectations. They fied in the most precipitate manner, neglecting their usual custom of carrying off their dead. Forty bodies were found on the ground, and I imagine the wounded must have been considerable To Lieutenant Johnstone I must attribute the success of this affair, and I trust he will receive the reward of his judicious conduct from the Brigadier. I have greatly to admire the coolness and deliberate conduct of the officers and men under my command, whose situation for a considerable period was very perilous. The number of the enemy opposed to them I cannot estimate at less than one thousand and five hundred, and well armed.

Subjoined is a list of the killed and wounded, and a statement of ammunition expended is herewith forwarded.

CHAPTER XII.

LINAL OPPRATIONS IN AVA .- CONCLUSION OF THE WAR.

Tur signal defeats inflicted on them in the neighbourhood of Prome, and the vigour with which they were followed up, struck terror into the enemy, and, as before related, before Sir Archibald Campbell reached Patanagob, they sent a flag of truce to propose terms of peace-When the Commissioners met, the same conditions as those formerly proposed were insisted upon by Sir Archibald Campbell, Sir James Brisbane, and Mr. Robertson, the Civil Commissioner, and as strenuously resisted by the Eventually, the latter yielded every point, except the war indemnity, which they succeeded in having reduced to one crore, and on this basis a treaty was executed on the 3rd January 1826. A suspension of arms until the 18th was agreed to, by which date it was expected that the treaty, duly ratified by the King, would be received back from the capital, the prisoners delivered up," and the first instalment of the money paid down.

These hopes were doomed to disappointment. The treaty was not received back by the date fixed, hostilities were resumed, and on the 18th a portion of the British force crossed the river and took the stockades of Melloon by storm, driving out of them a force of some sixteen thousand Burmese. The works were destroyed by fire, and once more the British force resumed its march for the enemy's capital

One more attempt was made by the Court of Ava to resist the march of the British army on Amaapura. It met with a signal defeat at Paghamyo on the 9th Pebruary, and nothing remained but submission to the will of the conqueror On the 16th Cebruary, Sir Archibald Campbell reached Yandaboh, within sixty miles of the capital, and at this place on the 24th, was finally concluded the treaty by which the war was brought to an end, after a duration of two years

By this treaty the King of Avi yielded up all claims to, or right of interference with, Assam, Junthia, Kachar and Manpur He ceded to the East India Company in perpetuity Arikan Proper, Ramir, Cheduba and Sandoway, and the three districts of Tenasseiim,—Yeh, Tavoy and Mergui He agreed also to receive a political resident at his court, to conclude a commercial treaty, and to pay a war fine of one crore of tupees in four instalments. The British, on their side engaged to retire at once to Rangoon and to quit the territories of Ava on the payment of the second instalment of the fine.

was also ascertained the king's brother in law and most of the men of rank, who had assisted at Zeahengaish were at Melloon They despatched a uoondook on the 28th with a flag of truce and a letter, stating it to be the wish of their chiefs to nut a period to hostilities and that a minister had arrived from Ava with full powers to treat and ratify and requesting a meeting for that pur pose. Lieutenant-Colonel Tidy and Lieutenant Smith of the Navy were accordingly despatched to arrange a conference to be held in a boat on the centre of the river moored between Melloon and Patanagoh Accordingly the Commander of the Forces and the Second Commissioner Mr Robertson attended by myself and most of the brigadiers met the two Burmese commissioners Kohen Menghee and the Kee Woonghee on the 30th ultimo and I am most happy to state that the result of the conferences of that day and yesterday has been a satisfactory adjustment as far as regards territory and money between the British and Burmese nations The ratification by the commissioners of the treaty takes place this day at two o clock, and the terms of peace are as follows -

The four provinces of Arracan to be ceded in perpetuity to the Honble Company

The provinces of Mergui Tavoy and Yeh to be ceded to the Hon ble Company in perpetuity

The Burmese Government engage to pay the Hon'ble Company one crore of rupees by instalments the periods for the payment of which to be settled this day

The provinces or kingdoms of Assam Cachar Jyntheea and Munnipore to be placed under princes to be named by the British Government

Residents with an except of fifty men to be at each court, British ships to be admitted into Burmese ports to land their cargoes free of duty, not to unship their rudders or land their guns. Burmese ships to have the same privileges in British ports, no person to be inolested for their opinions or conduct during the war hereafter.

The Stamese nation to be included in the peace

Thus I hope has terminated a war which has been most expensive in its prosecution not only in money but also by the effects of climate very destructive to both Luropean and Native troops but I hope the Hon ble the Governor in Council will here permit me to express the unanimous feeling of the Madras army for the considerate comforts the Madras Government have upon every occasion forwarded to their army here—comforts which have been the means of saving many valuable hay, and which will be ever most gratefully acknowledged by every officer and man.

PATANACOH
Tie 'nd Junuary 1826 } (Sd.) JAS BRISBANE Commodore

From May Genl Sir Archibald Campbell, A.C.B., &c., to George Swinton, Fug., Secretary to Government Secret and Political Department dated Head Quarters, Camp Patanogos, the 20th January 1886

My despatch of the 31st ultimo brought the operations of the army under my command down to that date and expressed my sanguing expectations that it would prove the last communication which I should have to address to you relative to the war in this country.

- 2 These hopes were unfortunately frustrated by the policy of a court apparently destitute of every principle of honour and good faith.
- ³ The signature of a treaty of peace by the British and Burman commissioners on the 3rd instant, and the pledge on the part of the latter that the same would be ratified by the King of Ata within fifteen days from that date and some specific articles as therein strict curried into effect within the same period has already been brought to the khowledge of the Right Houble the Governor General in Council by the proceedings of the British commissioners recorded in their despatches under date the 3rd instant. All occurrences of a purely political rature since then will now in his manner be furnished by the same authority. I shall therefore proceed to the detail of military creats resulting therefore.
- 4 On the 18th the day appointed for the riturn of the ratifed treaty &c the commissioners finding this, instead of a fulfilment of the large promise a further delay of six or sound days was solicited under such equipoeal circumstances as left no doubt that a total want of faith guided their councils, it was definitely declared that their request could not be complied with, and a secret article proposed to them, in which it was stipulated (together with the performance of others already agreed to) that they should evacuate the fortified and entrenched city of Melloon by sunrise on the morning of the 20th. On their positive rejection of this proposition, they were told that after twelve o'clock that very night (the 18th) hostilities would recommence. Deeming it of the utmost importance that no time should be lost in punishing duplicity of so flagrant a character, I ordered the construction of batteries and the landing of heavy ordnance from the flotilla to commence immediately after midnight, and every requisite arrangement to be made for an early attack upon Melloon. Lordship in Council will be enabled to appreciate the zeal and exertion with which my orders were carried into effect, under the direction of Lieutenant Colonel Hopkinson, commanding the artillery, and Lieutenant Underwood, the Chief Engineer faided by that indefatigable corps, the first battalion of Madras Pioncers, under the command of Captain Crowe), when I state that by ten o'clock next morning, I had eight and twenty pieces of ordnance in battery on points presenting a front of more than one mile on the eastern bank of the Irrawaddy, which corresponded with the extent of the enemy's line of defence on the opposite shore. I yet cherished hopes that the formidable appearance of our preparations would have induced them to make some further communications in the morning, instead of again risking the renewal of hostilities with troops, of whose decided superiority they had so recently received the most convincing and humiliating proofs. In this I was disappointed. At daylight, I perceived that the preceding night had been devoted by them to preparations equally laborious, and the construction of extensive and well-planned works, with a view to the resistance on which they had resolved

- 5. At eleven o'clock A. V. (the 19th), I ordered our batteries and rockets to open their fire on the enemy's position; it was warmly kept up, and with such precision of practice as to reflect the highest, credit on this branch of the service
 - 6. During this period, the troops intended for the assault were embarking in the boats of His Majesty's ships and the flotilla, at a point above our encampment at Patanagoh, under the superintendence and direction of Captain Chads of His Majesty's ship Alliquitor, senior naval officer, on whom this charge devolved, in the absence of His Excellency Commodere Sir James Brisbane, in consequence of effrems indeposition*

- 15. To Captain Chads of the Royal Navy and every officer and seamous of His Mayesty a ships and the Honble Company s flotilla, I am deeply indichted for the able and judicious manner in which the troops were transported to points of attack so near to the formulable works which they had to assail. I have the Lonour to enel so Cuptain Chads report together with his return of killed and wounded.
- 16 Upon this short but important service I derived every support from the zeal and all they of my staff general and personal
- 17 I neutenant Wilson of His Majesty & 13th Taght Infultry Aide de Cump to Brigadur General Cotton who will have the honour of discring this deep atch was present during the whole affur and is will qualified to give any further information which may be required by His Leidship on the suffect.

Despatch from Mayor General Sir Archibald Campbell, KOB &c., to George Swinton Eng., Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Department &c., &c. &c., dated Head Quarters Pakan any the 4th Rebruary 1826

The hiborious duty of collecting and destroying the enemy's artillery and stores together with a heavy fall of rain prevented my leaving Patanagoh with the first duison of the force, before the morning of the 25th ultimo. We have since advanced eighty five miles into the enemy a country and generally speaking over very had roads but without having occasion to fire a shot with the exception of a very daring and gallant charge made by a recompositing party of the Right Hon blot the Governor General's Body Guard under the command of Lieutenant Trant and Suba dar Major Kasi Wali. Mahomed upon a considerable hody of the enemys infantry, the particulars of which I have the honour herewith to enclose The chief killed is now ascertained to have been Moung toing be a commander who was the terror of his countrymen from his cruel disposition. We are now opposite to Som ben gheour, where and at Challein, the enemy had strong posts watching the road from Arracan, but evacuated those defences on our approach, and are now concentrating at Paghamnaew what force they can

Report from Lieutenant T A Trant, 95th Ioot, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General, to Lieutenant Colonel F S Trdy, CB, Deputy Adyutant-General, &c, dated Watmachaote, the 30th January 1826

I have the honour to request you for the information of the Commander of the Forces, that having been directed by the Deputy Quartermaster General to reconneitre the road in advance, I proceeded this morning accompanied by an escort of thirty four men of the Governor General's Body Guard commanded by Subadra Major Kazi Wali Mahomed, in the direction of Yaying should, and marched for ten miles without seeing any appear-affair, that I trust I may not be considered presumptions in bringing his conduct to the notice of the Commander of the I orces

Despatch from Major General Sir Archibald Campbell, KOB, $6 to Ocorgo Swinton Leq. Secretary to Government, Secret and Political Popartienti, $6, dated Head Quarters, Cump Pagahn vive the 11th February 1886

My lest communication made you acquainted with my belief that the enemy were concentrating upon Pagahm mew, subsequent intelligence, established the fut Part of the fugitives from Melloon had been rallied at that point and there, reinforced by fresh levies from Ava. The commund of the whole amounting to sixten thousand men was given to 73 yah thu yan Woon dook Nar Wein Barun (hing of the Lower Regions) who had pledged himself to hissorticing in onlines some signal success at the expense of the British whom in the involent language of his court and nation he styled the Invading Army of Rebellious Strangers

A recommusance effected on the evening of the 8th discover ed the enemy in force and strongly posted about five miles in advance of the village of Yesseah where I had that day encapped with my leading division

The report of Burman prisoners gave us to understand that the enemy had resolve I to defend two positions,—the first haining for its apput the Logola Nundah Pagoda the second within the old walls of the city which had undergone some partial repairs and the numerous pagodas in and about Pagahm—the former to be occupied by seven thousand the latter by nine thousand men. At this particular crisis I considered it of importance that the decisions of the Court of Aus should not be left to depend upon hopes cherished under a false confidence in the promises of their new commander. I therefore took measures for attacking the enemy on the morning of the 9th and ordered Brigadier General Cotton whose division was twelve miles in the rear to march with three of his corps at such an hour during the right as woull ensure his joining me by daylight. Thus reinforced I marched at time oclock

Four mules from our camp I found for the first time ance the commencement of the war the enemy prepared to dispute the ground with us in the field in front of his first position, the disposition of his troops and his plus for receiving our stack exhibiting marks of considerable judgment

The road from Yesseah to Pagahin leads through a country much overgrown with prickly jungle which whilst it renders it difficult for regular troops to diverge from its direct course either to the right or left, is in some places so thick, as completely to mask the formations and other manœuvres of large bodies The Burmese General, availing himself of these advantages, and. probably ignorant of the reinforcement the leading division had received during the night, drew up his army in the form of a crescent, both its flanks being considerably advanced and the main road running directly through its centre, thinking, no doubt, that we must advance by it, till opposed in front, when the wings would close in to attack us on both flanks and in the rear, which his great superiority in numbers would have enabled him to effect had we fallen into the snare But the advance of the British force was conducted in such a manner as soon to detect the object of his formation, and he was instantly assailed upon both flanks His Majesty's 13th Light Infantry led the right attack (under my own immediate direction), accompanied by four guns of the Bengal Horse Artillery and a small detachment of the Body-Guard, supported by His Majesty's 89th Regiment; His Majesty's 38th Regiment that on the left, supported by His Majesty's 41st, and two guns of the Madras Artillery, under the direction of Brigadier-General Cotton; whilst Lieutenant-Colonel Parlby, with the 43rd Madras Native Infantry, advanced on the bank of the Irrawaddy, our extreme left, to prevent the enemy throwing troops to our rear in that direction. They received our attack on both flanks tolerably well-formed and with a show of resolution, but were soon obliged to give way before the rapid fire and

The first of the enemy's position being thus carried the troops were reformed and after a short halt led to the attack of the second which they soon forced without much opposition. The enemy thus defeated at all points left me in possession of Pagahm mew, with all its stores ordinance arms and ammunition

Our loss during the operations of this day although of five hours duration and continued over four miles of ground I am happy to say is comparatively small a circumstance which I attribute to the want of their usual security behind works whereby they were not only protected but afforded a rest for their arms, which has often been the cause of considerable loss to us whilst advancing to the attack

Every individual engaged conducted himself so perfectly to my satisfaction that I will not particularise any A copy of the order which I issued upon the occasion and which I beg leave to enclose will best express to His Lordship my feelings towards the gallant troops I have the homour to command

I cannot close this despatch without communicating to His lordship the grantfying intelligence that the operations of this force by land and water since the fall of Melloon thore released from the tyranny of the enemy from twenty five to thirty thou sand of the inhabitants of the lower provinces who had been do tained and driven before his retiring boats and army many of them since the commencement of the war from three thousand to four thousand family buts have passed Pagahm downwards since its occupation by us

P S—From the information of prisoners of war and others I am led to understand the enemy will attempt further opposition to our progress towards the capital at a place called Poonay Sawah which I hope to reach in the course of a very few days

Head Quarters Pagahm-meu the 9th February 1826

Providence has once more blessed with success the Britisticana, but his country and in the decisive defeat of the imposing force posted under and within the walls of Pagahin mow the Usjor General recognises a fresh display of the military virtues which lave characterized his troops from the commencement of the war

Early on this day the enemy departing from the cuttous system of defence behind field works and entrenchment, which forms their usual device of war and relying on their grist immerical supernority and anigular advantages of ground with the least accession of bold maneuvers on the finals and front of the Dritish columns. This filse confidence has been rebuiled by a reverse severe series and dissistrous.

Their troops of either arm were repelled at every point, and their masses driven in confusion within their city

The storm of Pagrhm mew which followed, exhibited the same features of intremulity and self devotion

The frequency of these acts of spirited soldiership on the part of his troops renders it difficult for the Major General to vary the terms of his praise, but he offers to every officer and soldier engaged this day the tribute of his thanks at once with the affection of a commander and the cordinality of a comrade

Ava, by whose gallant and persevering exertions the recent contest with the Burmese Empire has been brought to an honour able and successful termination.

In reviewing the events of the late war, the Governor General in Council is bound to declare his conviction that the achievements of the British army in Ava have nobly sustained our military reputation, and have produced substantial benefit to the national interests

During a period of two years from the first declaration of hostities against the Government of Ava every disadvantage of carrying on war in a distant and most difficult country has been overcome and the collective forces of the Burman Empire for midable from their numbers the strength of their fortified positions and the shelter afforded by the nature of their country, have been repeatedly assailed and defeated. The persevering and obstinate efforts of the enemy to oppose our advance having failed, of success and his resources and means of further resistance having been exhausted the King of Ava has at length been compelled to accept of those terms of peace which the near approach of our army to the gates of his capital enabled us to dictate. Every object the Governor General in Council is happy to proclaim for which the war was undertaken has been finally and most satisfactorily accomplished

With sentiments of the highest gratification. His Lordship in Council further declares his persuasion that the result of the contest by teaching the Burman nation to know and respect the power which it had for a series of years insulted by its haughty demaids and unprotoked aggressions will prevent the interruption in future of those friendly relations which it is the interest of both States to maintain will prive the way for a freedom of intercourse hitherto unknown and promises to open to commerce new and advantageous sources calculated to promote the interests and the prospective of both countries.

most public manner, the acknowledgments and thanks of the Supreme Goternment for the important service he has rendered to the Hon'ble East India Company and to the British nation

The thanks of Government are also eminently due to the senior officers who have so ably and zualously seconded Major General Sir Archibald Campbell in his career of victory. Briga dier Generals Cotton, Macbean and M Greigh deservedly hold a high place in the estimation of His Lordship in Council, who has rejucatedly had occasion to notice, with applicate the gillantri, skill and promptitude displayed by those officers in the execution of the various important operations entrusted to their direction

Animated by the same noble spirit Brigadiers Miles Shaw, Llrington Armstrong Smell Hunter Blain Brodie, Pepper Parlby, Godum Hophinson and Sale have entitled themselves to the distinction of receiving from the Governor General in Council on this occasion the renewed expression of the sense entertained of their emment services for which they have on various occasions received the thanks of Government through Major General Sir Archibdd Campbell

Among those zealous and gallant officers some have been more fortunate than others in enjoying opportunities of performing special services. The ability with which Licuiteant Colonel Godwin of His Majestys 41st achieved the conquest of the fortified town of Martaban and its dependences appears to confir on that officer a just claim to the separate and distinct acknowledgments of the Governor General in Council. In like manner Licuiteauth Clonel Miles and Brigadica-General M Crough have entitled themselves to the special thanks of Government for their services the former in the capture of Tavoy and Mergui and the latter in that of the island of Cheduba.

The limits of a General Order necessarily preclude the Gover nor General in Council from indulging in the satisfaction of recording the names of all those officers whose services and exploits this moment crowd upon the grateful recollection of the Government by whom they were duly appreciated and acknow ledged at the time of their occurrence. His Lordship in Council requests that those officers will collectively and individually accept this renewed assurance that their meritorious exertions will ever be cordially remembered

The frequent mention in the public despatches of the gallating and zeal of Lieutenant Colonel Sale deservedly marks that officer as one who has established peculiar claims to the distinguished notice of His Lordship in Council. The services of the Bengal and Madras Poot Artiller; under Lieutenant Colonel Hopkinson and Lieutenant Colonel Pollock, and of the Bengal Rocket Troop and Horse Artillery, under Captains Graham and Lumsden, demand also the special acknowledgments of Government. The Governor-General in Council acknowledges, with peculiar approbation, the gallant and indefatigable exertions of that valuable corps, the Madras Pioneers, under Captain Crowe. His Lordship in Council desires further to express the high sense which Government entertains of the zealous and meritorious services of Lieutenant-Colonel Tidy and Major Jackson, and the officers of the Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General's Departments, and of Captain Snodgrass, Military Secretary, and Captain John Campbell, Personal Staff of the Commander of the Forces in Ava. The services of Superintending Surgeon Howard and the officers of the Medical Department, and of Captain Fiddes and the officers of the Commissariat are fully appreciated by His

The Governor-General in Council finds himself at a loss for adequate terms to describe the satisfaction with which the Government regards the general good conduct of the troops, European and Native, who have served in Ava Their patient endurance of the fatigues, privations and sickness to which they were unavoidably exposed in a hostile country, and in an inclement scason, subsequent to the capture of Rangoon, was not less conspicuous and praiseworthy than the spirit and determined resolution with which they maintained, during that period, an incessant and most harassing warfare of posts. Their irresistable gallantry in storming the Burmese stockades, however strong their defence by nature or art, and the success which crowned their repeated encounters with the enemy, reflect with equal credit on the troops who achieved those exploits, and on their leaders, who, justly confiding in British energy, discipline and courage, were never deterred by the most formidable disparity of numbers or difficulties of position, from assaulting the enemy whenever the opportunity could be found.

To the Native troops of the Honble East India Company who have so often successfully emulated their European comrades in arms the highest meed of approbation and applause is not more cheerfully accorded than it has been honourably won. The Mad ras sepoy regiments destined for the expedition to Ava obeyed with admirable alacrity and zeal the call for their services in a foreign land involving to them many heavy sacrifices and priva tions. This devotion to their Government reflects the highest credit on the character of the Coast Army not more honourable to themselves than it is doubtless gratifying to the Government of Fort St George as affording unequivocal proof of the sentiments of gratitude and attachment with which that army acknowledges the paternal anxiety and care that ever watches over and consults its best interests and welfare. The detachments of the Bengal native troops employed in Ava consisting of a portion of the Governor General's Body Guard commanded by Captain Sneyd and details of native artillery have been animated throughout by the noblest spirit of gallantry and zeal, the former more especially are in a peculiar degree entitled to the warmest thanks of the Supreme Government for their voluntary offer of service beyond sea and for their distinguished conduct in the field under their native as well as their European officers.

The conduct of that portion of the Naval branch of the expedition which belongs to the East India Company has been exemplary and conspicuous for gallantry and indefatigable exertion and it has fully shared in all the honourable toils and well earned triumphs of the land force The Governor-General in Council experiences the most sensible gratification in offering to Commodore Hayes to Captain Hardy senior captain of the Bombay Marine and to the several commanders and officers of the Bombay cruizers which have been employed in the Irra waddy and to the officers in command of the armed bries and divisions of gun boats the cordial thanks of Government for their zealous and meritorious services. Although not command ing in person the Hon'ble Company's natal force in the Irranaddy Commodore Hayes has amply entitled himself to the special notice and consideration of Government on this occasion since it was mainly owing to his professional and un remitting exertions that the armed flotilla from this port was so eff ciently equipped and thus enabled to acquit itself in a man ter which has repeatedly been I onoured with the approbation of His Lxcellenes the Naval Commander in Chief of His May sty a Squadron in the Last In lies and the officers of the Poval Navy ander whose orders they have been en ploved in communction with the armed boats of His Majests a ships. The Governor Gereral in Council has not overlooked the spirit and bravery characteristic of British seamen manifested by several of the masters and officers of transports and armed vessels in various actions with the Burmese in the vicinity of Rangoon.

It belongs to a higher authority than the Government of India to notice, in adequate and appropriate terms, the services of His Majesty's Squadron, which has co-operated with His Majesty's and the Hon'ble East India Company's land forces in the late hostilities with the Government of Ava. The Governor-General in Council, however, gladly seizes this opportunity of expressing the deep sense of obligation with which the Supreme Government acknowledges the important and essential aid afforded by His Excellency Commodore Sir James Brisbano in person, as well as by the officers, non-commissioned officers, seamen and marines of His Majesty's ships which have been employed in the Irrawaddy. Inspired by the most ardent zenl for the honour and interest of the nation and the East India Company, His Excellency the Naval Commander-in-Chief lost no time in proceeding with the boats of the Boadicea to the head-quarters of the British army at Prome, and directing in person the operations of the river force, rendered the most essential service in the various decisive and memorable actions which, in the month of December last, compelled the Burmese chiefs to sue for peace.

But while recording his gratitude to those who have partaken of and survived this arduous contest, the Governor-General in Council must also advert to the early and deep regret occasioned by the death of Commodore Grant, under whose personal direction the ships of the expedition first proceeded against Rangoon. The heartfelt satisfaction arising from the success of the British arms in the Burman dominions must now also be tempered with feelings of sorrow for the loss of the many brave officers and men who have fallen in the course of the war. Their memory will ever be associated with the heroic deeds and splendid triumphs of the British army in Ava, and will be regarded with affection and respect by their Sovereign and their Country.

In testimony of the brillant services achieved by the army under the command of Major-General Str Archibald Campbell, the Governor-General in Councul is pleased to resolve that all the corps, European and Native, in the service of the Hon'ble East India Company who have been employed in the Burman country, including the corps which were detached by that officer from his more unmediate command for the conquest of the enemy's possessions of Cheduba, Negrais and Bassein on the one side, and Martaban, Yeh, Tavoy and Mergui on the other, shall beer on their regimental colours the word Ava," with the words 'Rangoon,' 'Donabew," 'Prome,' "Melloon' and "Tagalim,' as they may have been respectively present at one or more of the actions at those places." With respect to the King's regiments, the Gover nor General in Council will recommend to His Majesty, through the proper channel, to grant the same distinction to them' Medals also, bearing a suitable device, are to be distributed to all the troops which at any period during the war were employed under the command of Major General Sir Archibald Campbell including the officers and men of the florilla and gun boats serving in the Iramwaldy.

The Governor General in Council cunnot conclude these General Orders expressive of his high approbation of the merits and services of the army under Major General Sir Archibal Campbell without intimating at the same time his entire satisfaction with the conduct of the two divisions of British treops intended to penetrate into Ava from our north eastern and south eastern frontiers, and also of the British force employed in the expulsion of the enemy from the country of Assain

The latter service namely, the conquest of Assam was achieved by the force under Lieutenant Colonel A. Richards with the most complete success, the capital, Rungpore having surrendered on terms and the Burmese troops having been entire by expelled from that country

On the side of Cachar physical difficulties of an insurmountable nature hyung arrested at its very outset the progress of the army under Brigader General Shultham no opportunity was afforded to that army of displaying those qualities of courage per severance and zeal which the Governor General in Couragi is estimated to possessed in common with its more fortunate brothern in Ava.

Similar and no less serious impediments ultimately opposed the advance of the fine army under Brigadier General Morrison over the mountains of Arracan into the valley of the Irrawaddy, but the capture by the detachment under Brigadier W. Richards of the forts and heights of the captal of Arracan afforded an earn est of what would have been effected had opportunities offered by the judgment, prudence, and skill of the commander and officers of that division and by the valour zeal and interputly of the troops of which it was composed. This was amply suffice at I in the London Galette of the 29th December 1826 it was announced that the Royal permits on had been granted to the following corps to emblacon the word.

Council deeply laments the general sickness which attacked and utterly disabled for further effective service the South-Eastern Division of the army, and the loss of many brave officers and men who fell victims to the noxious climate of Armacan

In testimony of the high sense entertained by Government of the services of the troops by whom the provinces of Assam and Arracan were conquered, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to order that the several native corps who were employed in those countries shall respectively bear on their colours the words "Assam" and "Arracan," as the case may be, and His Majesty will be solicited to grant to the 44th and 54th Regiments the same distinction. In further proof of the approbation with which the Government regards the mentorious conduct of its native troops serving in foreign countries, medals, with an appropriate device, shall be presented to the troops which assisted at the conquest of Assam and Arracan.

By command of the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council.

[•] This was not carried out as regards the Madras regiments and the 44th and 54th Foot, which were permitted to bear the word "Ars" only on their colours. Thus, for precisely the same service the Bengal corps had the word "Arracin," and the Madras and the two Royal corps the word "Ars" inscribed on their colours.
